THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

Deacon & Peterson, Publishers,

NUMBER SIXTY-SIX SOUTH THIRD ST.

Two Dollars Per Annum, In Advance.

THREE DOLLARS IF NOT PAID IN ADVANCE.

BENJAMIN DEACON, HENRY PETERSON, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

A FAMILY NEWSPAPER: NEUTRAL IN POLITICS.

CLUBS.—FOR TERMS TO CLUBS, SEE PROSPECTUS ON THIRD PAGE.

DEVOTED TO MORALITY, PURE LITERATURE, FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC NEWS, AGRICULTURE, THE COMMERCIAL INTEREST, SCIENCE, ART AND AMUSEMENT.

VOLUME XXX. PHILADELPHIA, SATURDAY, MAY 17, 1851. WHOLE NO. 1555.

Choice Poetry.

NOT VERY FAR.

Surely, you heaven, where angels see God's face,
Is not so distant as we dream,
From this low earth? 'Tis but a little space,
The narrow crossing of a slender stream;
'Tis but a veil, which winds might blow aside;
Yes, these are all that us of earth divide
From the bright dwelling of the glorified—
The land of which I dream.

These peaks are nearer heaven than earth below;
These hills are higher than they seem;
'Tis not the clouds they touch, nor the soft brow
Of the o'erbending azure as we deem.
'Tis the blue floor of heaven that they upbear;
And, like some old and wildly-trapped stair,
They lift us to the land where all is fair—
The land of which I dream.

These ocean-waves, in their unmeasured sweep,
Are brighter, bluer than they seem;
True images of the celestial deep—
Fed from the fullness of the unfailing stream—
Heaven's glassy sea of everlasting rest.
With not a breath to stir its silent breast,
The sea that laves the land where all are blest—
The land of which I dream.

And these keen stars, the bridal gems of night,
Are purer, lovelier than they seem;
Filled from the inner fountain of deep light,
They pour down heaven's own beam;
Clear speaking from their throne of glorious blue,
Of accents ever sweet, ever new,
In the glad home above, beyond our view—
The land of which I dream.

This life of ours, these lingering years of earth,
Are brighter, swifter than they seem;
A little while, and the great second birth
Of time shall come, the prophet's ancient theme.
Then He the King, the Judge, at length shall come,
And for this desert, where we sadly roam,
Shall give the kingdom for our endless home—
The land of which I dream.

Romance of History.

TRUE LOVE:

OR,

THE LAST OF THE RUTHVENS.

CHAPTER I.

"Davie Calderwood! worthy tutor and mentor!—Davie Calderwood." The old man made no answer to the call, which he scarce seemed even to hear. He sat not far from the shadow of his college walls, watching the little silver ripples of the Cam. His doctor's robes hid a common homely dress of gray; his large feet, dangling over the river bank, were clumsily shod, and his white, close-cropped hair, gave him a Puritanical look, when compared with the curled lair of the two younger and more fashionable.

"Davie Calderwood!—wake up, my man! News! —great news! From Scotland!" added the elder lad, in a cautious whisper.

It pierced the torpor of the old man: he started up with trembling eagerness.

"Eh, my dear bairn!—I mean my lord—my Lord Gowrie!"

"Hush!" said the youth bitterly; "let not the birds of the air carry that secret. Was it not crushed out of the earth a year ago? Call me William Ruthven, or else plain William, till with my good sword I win back my title and my father's name."

"Willie—Willie!" murmured the younger brother in anxious warning.

"He is afraid—see Patrick!" laughed William Ruthven. "He thinks that walls have ears, and tavern tongues, and that every idle word I say will go with speed to the vain, withered old hag in London, or to dull King Jamie in Edinburgh! He thinks he shall yet see brother Willie's love-hawk's floating from the top of the Tolbooth beside those of winsome Alock and noble John."

The elder youth spoke in that bitter jesting tone used to hide keenest suffering; but the younger one, a slight delicate boy of nineteen, clung to his brother's arm, and burst into tears.

"My lord," said Patrick Lindsay, confidentially, "ye will be unco tender o' the lad—your ae brither—your mother's youngest bairn! To speak too lightly o' things awfu' to tell of—awfu' to mind. Master Patrick," he added, laying his hand gently on the boy's shoulder, "ye are thinking of the pair bodie given to the fowls of the air and to the winds of heaven, at Stirling, Edinburgh, and Dundee; but ye forgot that whiles man dishonours the poor dust, even'mair God keeps the count. Therefore mind ye thou o' your two brothers—the bonnie Earl of Gowrie, and noble Alexander Ruthven—that are baith now with God."

As he spoke, the doctor's voice faltered, for nature had put into his huge, ill-formed frame a gentle, womanly spirit; and though he had fled from his country, and never beheld it since the year when his beloved lord, the first Earl of Gowrie, and father of these youths, perished on the scaffold—still, amidst all the learning and honors gained in his adopted home, David Calderwood carried in his bosom the same true Scottish heart; and perhaps it yearned more over the boy Patrick, in that he was, like his long dead father, a quiet reclining student, given to all abstruse philosophy; whereas William the elder was a youth of bold spirit, who chafed under his forced retirement, and longed to tread in the footsteps of his ancestors, even though they led to the same bloody end.

"Well, good master," he said, "when you have wept enough with Patrick, hear my news."

"Is it from thy mother, the pair hunted dove, cuid and worn, flying hither and thither about the ruins of her nest?"

Lord Gowrie's—let us give him the title for three months borne, then attainted, but which yet fondly lingered on the lips of two faithful friends, David Calderwood, and Lettice his daughter—Lord Gowrie's brow reddened, and instinctively he put his hand to where his sword should have hung. Then he muttered angrily, "Ah! I forget I am no Earl, no Scottish knight, but only a poor Cambridge student. But," he added, his face kindling, "though the lightning has fallen on the parent trunk, and its two brave branches, and though the rest are trodden under foot of men, still there is life, blood, fruit in the old tree. It shall grow up and shelter her yet—my noble, long-enduring mother—the first, the best, the —No; she shall not be the last Lady Gowrie."

While speaking, a flush, deeper even than that of youth's enthusiasm, burned on the young Earl's cheek, and he looked up to the window whence Lettice sat—sweet Lettice Calderwood, sweeter even than she was fair! She at a distance dimly saw the look; she met it with a frank smile—the smile a single-hearted, happy girl would cast willingly on all the world.

"The news—the news!" murmured old David.

"My bairns, ye talk and ye rave, but ye dinna tell the news."

"My mother writes that the cloud seems passing from our house; for the Queen Anne—she frowns us still, despite her kind—the Queen Anne has recently read for our sister, Beatrice, to court."

"Beatrice, whom brother Alexander loved more than all the rest," said Patrick, simply. But the elder brother frowned, and rather harsh ly bade him hold his peace.

"Patrick is a child, and knows nothing," said the young Earl; "but I know all. What open is for this weak Queen's folly or remembered sin, if through her interest I enjoy back into my father's honored seat? Oh, shame that I can only creep; that I must enter Scotland like a thief, and steal in at the court holding on to a woman's robe, when I would fain come with fire and sword, to crush among the ashes of his own palace, the murderer of my race!"

He spoke with a reckless fierceness, strange in such a youth; his black brows contracted, and his dilated nostrils seemed to swell and grow. Simple Davie Calderwood looked and trembled.

"Ye're a Ruthven, true and bold; but ye're no like the Earl o' Gowrie. I see in your face your father's father—him that rose from a dying bed to be a shedder of blood—him that slew Rizzio in Holyrood!"

"And when I stand in Holyrood—whether I creep in there or force my way with my sword—I will kneel down on that bloody spot, and pray Heaven to make me too, as faithful an avenger," was the keen low answer. Then, turning off his passionate emotion with a jest, as he often did, Lord Gowrie said gayly to his brother, "Come, Patrick, look not so pale; tell our good master the rest of the news—that to-night, this very night, then and I must start for bonnie Scotland!"

"Who is talking of bonnie Scotland?" said a girl's voice, young indeed, but yet touched with that inexplicable tone which never comes until life's first lessons have been learned—those lessons, whether of joy or grief, which leave in the child's careless bosom a woman's heart.

Lord Gowrie turned quickly and looked at Lettice, smilingly—rapturously, yet bashfully, as a youth looks at his first idol. Then he repeated his intention of departure, though in a tone less joyous than before. Lettice heard, without emotion as it seemed, only that her two thin hands—she was a little creature, pale and slight—were pressed tightly together. There are some faces which, by instinct or by force of will, can hide all emotion, and then it is the hands which tell the tale—the fluttering fingers, the tight clench, the palms rigidly crushed together. But these tokens of suffering no one saw: no one saw them in Lettice Calderwood.

"Do ye no grieve, my daughter, over these bairns that go from us? Was'a me! but there's danger in like step to baith the lads."

"Are both going?" asked Lettice; and her eyes wandered towards the younger brother, who kept a little apart, and stood by the little river, plucking leaves, and throwing them down the stream. "It is a long, severe journey, and Master Patrick has been so ill, and is not yet strong," added the girl, speaking with that grave dignity which, as mistress of the household, she sometimes assumed, and which made her seem far older than her years.

"Patrick is a manly fellow, to be sure," answered Lord Gowrie, inwardly smiling over his own youthful strength and beauty; "but I will take care of him—he will go with his brother."

"Yes," said Patrick, overhearing all, as it seemed. But he said no more; he was a youth of few words. Very soon Calderwood and the young lord began to talk over the projected journey. But Patrick sat down by the river-bank, and began idly plucking and examining the moss-flowers, just as if his favorite herbal and botanical science were the only interest of life.

"Patrick!" whispered Lettice's kind, sisterly voice. She sometimes forgot the difference of rank and blood in her tender compassion for the young proscribed fugitives who had been sent, in such utter destitution and misery, to her father's care—"Patrick!"

"Yes, Mistress Lettice."

"The evening closes cold; take this!" She had brought a cloak to wrap round him.

"You are very kind, very thoughtful—like a sister." Saying this, he turned quick, and looked at her. Lettice smiled. Whether gladness or sorry, she could always bend her lips to that pale, grave smile.

"Well, then, listen to me, as you always do; I being such a staid, wise old woman—"

"Though a year younger than I."

"Still, listen to me. My Lord Gowrie, your brother is rash and bold; you must be prudent for the sake of both. When you go from us, Patrick, cease dreaming, and use your wisdom. You have indeed the strength and wisdom of a man; it will be needed. Let not William bring you into peril; take care of him and of yourself."

Here the lips that spoke so womanly, grave, and calm, began to tremble; and Lettice, hearing her name called, went away.

Patrick seemed mechanically to repeat to himself her last words, whether in pleasure, pain, or indifference, it was impossible to tell. Then his features relapsed into their usual expression—thoughtful, quiet, and passionless. An old-young face it was—a mingling of the child with the man of old, but with no trace of youth between—a face such as we see sometimes, and fancy that we read therein the coming history as plainly written as in a book. So while, as the evening paused, Lord Gowrie's fiery spirit busied itself about plots and schemes, the fate of kingdoms and of Kings; and David Calderwood, stirred from his learned equipoise, trembled his simple mind with anxiety concerning his two beloved pupils—Lettice hid all her thoughts in her heart, brooding tremblingly over them there. But the young herbalist sat patiently pulling his flowers to pieces, and examining meanwhile, his eyes fixed on the little rippling stream. He seemed born to be one of those meek philosophers who through life sit still, and let the world roll by with all its tumults, passions, and cares. They are above it; or, as some would deem, below it. But in either case it touches not them.

It was the dawn of a September day, gloomy and cold. All things seemed buried in a dull sleep, except the Cam that went murmuring over its pebbles hour after hour, from night till morning. Lettice heard it under her window, as she stood in the pale light, fastening her head-tire with trembling hands. They were just starting—the two young Scottish cavaliers. Both had cast off the dress of the student, and appeared as befitted their birth. Bold, noble, and handsome looked the young Earl William in his gay doublet, with his sword by his side. As he walked with Lettice to the garden, (he had half-intreated, half-commanded to have a rose given by her hand,) his manner seemed less boyish—more courtly and tender withal. His last words, too, as he rode away, were a gay compliment, and an ardent yet youthful hope; alluding to the time when he should come back endowed with the forfeited honors of his race, and choose, not out of Scottish but of English maidens, a "Lady Gowrie."

Patrick, stealing after, a little paler—a little more silent than usual—affectionately bade his master adieu; and to the hearty blessing and good-speed only whispered "Amen." Then he took Lettice's hand; he did not kiss it, as his brother had graciously and courteously done; but he clasped it with a light cold clasp, saying gently, "Farewell! Lettice, my kind sister."

She moved a little, as if pained; and then calmly echoed the farewell. But when the sound of the horses' feet died away, she went slowly up to her little chamber, shut the door, sat down, and wept. Once only looking at her little hand—holding it as if there still lingered on it a vanished touch—the deep color rose in her cheek, and ever her face there passed a quick, sharp pang.

"He sleeps—always his sister!" She said to more. After a while she dried her tears, wrapped round her heart that veil of ordinary color life which a woman must always wear, and went down to her father.

"Lettice, what are those torn papers that thou art fastening together with thy needle? Are they writings or problems of mine?"

"Not this time, father," said Lettice, meekly; "they are fragments left by your two pupils."

"That is, by Patrick! William did not love to study, except that fantastic learning which all the Ruthvens loved—the occult sciences. Where papers are these?"

"Master Patrick's; he may want them when he returns."

"When! Ah, the dear bairn, his pair father's sin sun! will I ever see his face again!"

There was no answer save that of silence and patience. Lettice's fingers worked on. But a dull cold shadow seemed to spread itself over the room—over everywhere she turned her eyes; duller than the gloomy evening—colder, than the cold March rain which beat against the narrow college windows—that shadow that crept over her heart. She looked like one who for many days and weeks had borne on her spirit—not a heavy load, that is easier to bear, but a restless struggle—sometimes pain, sometimes joy, doubt, fear, expectation, faith, wild longing, followed by blank endurance. It was now a long time since she had learned the whole bitter meaning of those words, "The hope deferred which maketh the heart sick."

"My dear lassie," said the old doctor, rousing himself from a mathematical calculation which had degenerated into a mere every-day reverie, "where has ye kenspit the pair young Earl's letter, that said he and Patrick were baith coming back to Cambridge in a week? Can ye no tell how lang it is sin syne?"

Lettice could have answered at once—could have told the weeks, days, hours—each passing slow like years—but she did not. She paused as though to reckon, and then said, "It is nigh two months, if I count right."

"Two months! Alas, alas!"

"Do you think, father," she said slowly, striving to speak for the first time what had been so long pent up that its utterance shook her whole frame with trembling—"do you think that any harm has come to the poor young gentlemen?"

"I pray God no! Lettice, do you mind what our pair Willie—I canna say 'the Earl'—could us of their great good fortune through the Queen; how that he would soon be living in Edinburgh as a grand lord, and his brother should end his studies at St. Andrews; only Patrick said he loved better to come back to Cambridge, and to his auld master. The dear bairn! Do you mind all this, Lettice?"

"Yes, father." Ah, truly poor Lettice did! "Then, my child, we needna fear for them. They are two young gentlemen o'rank, and maybe they lead a merry life, and that whiles gars them forget auld friends; but they'll aye come back sin time."

So saying, the old doctor settled himself in his high-backed chair, and contentedly went to sleep. His daughter continued her work until the papers were all arranged and it grew too dark to see, then she closed her eyes and pondered.

Her thoughts were not what may be called love-thoughts, such as you, young modern maidens, indulge in when you dream of some lover kneeling at your feet, or walking by your side, know yourself adored, and exult in the adoration. No such light emotion ruled Lettice's fancy. Her love—if it were love, and she scarce knew it as such—had crept in unwittingly, under the guise of pity, reverence, affection; it had struck its roots deep in her nature; and though it bore no flowers, its life was one with the life of her heart. She never paused to think, "Do I love?" or "Am I loved?" but her whole being flowed into that thought, were after wave, like a stream that insensibly glides into one dry channel, leaving all the rest.

Lettice sat and thought mournfully over the weeks of wearying expectation for him who never came. How at first the hours flew winged with restless joy, how she lay down in hope and rose in hope, and said to herself, calmly smiling, "To-morrow—to-morrow!" How afterwards she strove to make those words into a daily balm to still fear and pain that would not sleep; how at last she breathed them wildly, hour by hour of each blank day, less believing in them than letting them up like a cry of despair which must be answered. But it never was answered; and the silence now had grown so black and dull around her, that it pressed down all struggles—left her not even strength for fears.

She had feared very much at first. The young Earl William, so sanguine, so bold, might have been deceived. The King's seeming bonity might be but assumed, until he could crush the poor remnant of the Ruthven blood. She pondered continually over the awful fate of the Gowrie plot; often at night, in her dreams, she saw the emasculated axe, the two heads, so beautiful and young, mouldering away on the Tolbooth. Sometimes beside them she saw another—Horror! she knew it well—the pale, boyish cheek—the thoughtful brow. Then she would wake in shudderings and cries; and falling on her knees, pray that wherever he was —whether or no he might gladden her eyes again —Heaven would keep him safe and have pity upon her.

Again she thought of him in prosperity, living honored and secure under the glory of the Ruthven line—forgetting old friends, as her father had said. Well, and what right had she to murmur? She did not—save that at times, even against her will, the selfish cry of weak human tenderness would rise up—"Alas, thou hast all things, and I—I perish for want!" But her conscience ever answered—"He neither knows nor sees, so with him there is no wrong."

Night, heavy night, fell down once more.—Lettice had learned to long for the dull sleeper it brought—a little peace, a little oblivion mercifully closing each blank day. "Is it not time for rest, father?" she often asked long ere the usual hour; and she was so glad to creep to her little bower-chamber, and shut out the moonbeams and the starlight, and lie in darkness and utter forgetfulness, until lulled to sleep by the ripple of the stream close by. There had been a time when she either sat up with her father, or else lay awake till midnight, listening for steps in the garden.—for voices beneath the window—when every summons at the gate made her heart leap wildly. But all this was passed now.

Lettice put down the lamp, took off her coif, and unbound her hair. Before retiring, she opened the window, and gazed out into the night, which was cold, but very clear. She half leaned forward, and stretched out her hands to the North. No words can paint the look her countenance wore. It was yearning, imploring, despairing, like that of a soul longing to depart and follow upwards another soul already gone. In her eyes was an intensity that seemed mighty enough to pierce through all intervening space, and fly, dove-winged, to its desire. Then the lids dropped, the burning tears fell, and her whole frame sank collapsed, an image of hopeless, motionless dejection.

She was roused by a noise—the dash of oars on the usually-deserted river. She shut the window hastily, blushing lest the lamp should have revealed her attitude and her emotion to any stranger without. The sound of oars ceased —there were footsteps up the garden alleys—there was her father's eager voice at the door, mingled with other well-known voices. They were coming—they were come!

In a moment, all the days, weeks, months of weary waiting were swept away like clouds. The night of her sorrow was forgotten as though it had never been.

"And now that I am returned, thou wilt not give me another flower, Mistress Lettice?" said the young Earl, as he followed her up the garden-walks in the fair Spring morning. She had risen early, for sleep had been driven away by joy.

"There are no flowers now, at least none gay enough to be worth your wearing. Daisies and violets would ill-suit that courtly dress," said the maiden, speaking blithely out of her full-hearted content.

"Does it displease you, then? Shall I banish my silver-hilted sword, and my rich doublet with three hundred points, and don the poor student's hodden gray? I would do it, fair damsel, and willingly, for thee!"

And he smiled with a little conscious pride, as if he knew well that six months passed in the shadow of a court had transformed the bashful youth into an accomplished cavalier—brave, handsome, winning, yet pure and noble at heart, as the young knights were in the golden time of Sidney and of Raleigh.

Lettice regarded him in frank admiration.—"Truly, my Lord Gowrie, you are changed!—Source can I dare to give you the name you once honored me by permitting. How shall I call you and Master Patrick my brothers?"

"I wish it not," said the young man, hastily. "As for Patrick,—never mind Patrick;" as Lettice's eyes seemed wandering to the river-side, where the younger Ruthven sat in his old seat. "You see he is quite happy with his herbal and his books of philosophy. Let him stay there; for I would fain have speech with you." He led her into a shady path, and began to speak hurriedly. "Lettice, do you know that I may soon be summoned back to Scotland—not as a captive, but as the reinstated Earl of Gowrie? And, Lettice,"—here his voice faltered, and his cheek glowed, and he looked no more the bold cavalier, but a timid youth in his first wooing—"dear Lettice, if I might win my heart's desire, I would not depart alone."

"Not depart alone! Then thou wilt not leave Patrick with me, as was planned?" said the girl, uttering the first thought that rose to her mind, and then blushing for the name.

"I spoke not of Patrick—he may do as he wills. I spoke of some one dearer than brother or sister: of her who—"

"What! has it come to that?" merrily laughed out the unconscious girl. "Is our William at once, without sign or token, about to bring to us, and then perforce carry away home, a bonnie Lady Gowrie?"

The Earl seemed startled by a sudden doubt. "It is strange you should speak thus! Are you mocking me, or is it a womanly device to make me woo in plainer terms? Hear, then, Lettice, that I love! It is you I would win, you whom I would carry home in triumph, my beautiful, my wife, my Lady Gowrie!"

She stood transfixed, looking at him, not with blushes, not with maiden shame, but in a sort of dull amaze.

"Do my words startle you, sweet one? Forgive me, then, for I scarce know what I say.—Only I love you—I love you! Come to my heart, my Lettice, my wife that shall be!" and he stretched out his arms to enfold her. But Lettice, uttering a faint cry, glided from his vain clasp, and fled into the house.

In their deepest affections women rarely judge by outward show. The young Earl, gifted with all qualities to charm a lady's eye, had been loved as a brother—nothing more. The dreamy Patrick, in whose apparently passionless nature lay the mystery wherein such as Lettice ever delight—whose learning awed, while his weakness attracted tender sympathy—he it was who had unconsciously filled the treasure which a man giving all his substance could not gain—a woman's first, best love.

Her woor evidently dreamed not the truth. She saw him still walking where she had left him, or passing under her window, looking up rather anxiously, yet smiling. One thought only rose many weeks of wearying expectation for him who never came. How at first the hours flew winged with restless joy, how she lay down in hope and rose in hope, and said to herself, calmly smiling, "To-morrow—to-morrow!" How afterwards she strove to make those words into a daily balm to still fear and pain that would not sleep; how at last she breathed them wildly, hour by hour of each blank day, less believing in them than letting them up like a cry of despair which must be answered. But it never was answered; and the silence now had grown so black and dull around her, that it pressed down all struggles—left her not even strength for fears.

She had feared very much at first. The young Earl William, so sanguine, so bold, might have been deceived. The King's seeming bonity might be but assumed, until he could crush the poor remnant of the Ruthven blood. She pondered continually over the awful fate of the Gowrie plot; often at night, in her dreams, she saw the emasculated axe, the two heads, so beautiful and young, mouldering away on the Tolbooth. Sometimes beside them she saw another—Horror! she knew it well—the pale, boyish cheek—the thoughtful brow. Then she would wake in shudderings and cries; and falling on her knees, pray that wherever he was —whether or no he might gladden her eyes again —Heaven would keep him safe and have pity upon her.

Again she thought of him in prosperity, living honored and secure under the glory of the Ruthven line—forgetting old friends, as her father had said. Well, and what right had she to murmur? She did not—save that at times, even against her will, the selfish cry of weak human tenderness would rise up—"Alas, thou hast all things, and I—I perish for want!" But her conscience ever answered—"He neither knows nor sees, so with him there is no wrong."

Night, heavy night, fell down once more.—Lettice had learned to long for the dull sleeper it brought—a little peace, a little oblivion mercifully closing each blank day. "Is it not time for rest, father?" she often asked long ere the usual hour; and she was so glad to creep to her little bower-chamber, and shut out the moonbeams and the starlight, and lie in darkness and utter forgetfulness, until lulled to sleep by the ripple of the stream close by. There had been a time when she either sat up with her father, or else lay awake till midnight, listening for steps in the garden.—for voices beneath the window—when every summons at the gate made her heart leap wildly. But all this was passed now.

Lettice put down the lamp, took off her coif, and unbound her hair. Before retiring, she opened the window, and gazed out into the night, which was cold, but very clear. She half leaned forward, and stretched out her hands to the North. No words can paint the look her countenance wore. It was yearning, imploring, despairing, like that of a soul longing to depart and follow upwards another soul already gone. In her eyes was an intensity that seemed mighty enough to pierce through all intervening space, and fly, dove-winged, to its desire. Then the lids dropped, the burning tears fell, and her whole frame sank collapsed, an image of hopeless, motionless dejection.

She was roused by a noise—the dash of oars on the usually-deserted river. She shut the window hastily, blushing lest the lamp should have revealed her attitude and her emotion to any stranger without. The sound of oars ceased —there were footsteps up the garden alleys—there was her father's eager voice at the door, mingled with other well-known voices. They were coming—they were come!

In a moment, all the days, weeks, months of weary waiting were swept away like clouds. The night of her sorrow was forgotten as though it had never been.

"And now that I am returned, thou wilt not give me another flower, Mistress Lettice?" said the young Earl, as he followed her up the garden-walks in the fair Spring morning. She had risen early, for sleep had been driven away by joy.

"There are no flowers now, at least none gay enough to be worth your wearing. Daisies and violets would ill-suit that courtly dress," said the maiden, speaking blithely out of her full-hearted content.

"Does it displease you, then? Shall I banish my silver-hilted sword, and my rich doublet with three hundred points, and don the poor student's hodden gray? I would do it, fair damsel, and willingly, for thee!"

And he smiled with a little conscious pride, as if he knew well that six months passed in the shadow of a court had transformed the bashful youth into an accomplished cavalier—brave, handsome, winning, yet pure and noble at heart, as the young knights were in the golden time of Sidney and of Raleigh.

Lettice regarded him in frank admiration.—"Truly, my Lord Gowrie, you are changed!—Source can I dare to give you the name you once honored me by permitting. How shall I call you and Master Patrick my brothers?"

"I wish it not," said the young man, hastily. "As for Patrick,—never mind Patrick;" as Lettice's eyes seemed wandering to the river-side, where the younger Ruthven sat in his old seat. "You see he is quite happy with his herbal and his books of philosophy. Let him stay there; for I would fain have speech with you." He led her into a shady path, and began to speak hurriedly. "Lettice, do you know that I may soon be summoned back to Scotland—not as a captive, but as the reinstated Earl of Gowrie? And, Lettice,"—here his voice faltered, and his cheek glowed, and he looked no more the bold cavalier, but a timid youth in his first wooing—"dear Lettice, if I might win my heart's desire, I would not depart alone."

"Not depart alone! Then thou wilt not leave Patrick with me, as was planned?" said the girl, uttering the first thought that rose to her mind, and then blushing for the name.

"I spoke not of Patrick—he may do as he wills. I spoke of some one dearer than brother or sister: of her who—"

"What! has it come to that?" merrily laughed out the unconscious girl. "Is our William at once, without sign or token, about to bring to us, and then perforce carry away home, a bonnie Lady Gowrie?"

The Earl seemed startled by a sudden doubt. "It is strange you should speak thus! Are you mocking me, or is it a womanly device to make me woo in plainer terms? Hear, then, Lettice, that I love! It is you I would win, you whom I would carry home in triumph, my beautiful, my wife, my Lady Gowrie!"

She stood transfixed, looking at him, not with blushes, not with maiden shame, but in a sort of dull amaze.

"Do my words startle you, sweet one? Forgive me, then, for I scarce know what I say.—Only I love you—I love you! Come to my heart, my Lettice, my wife that shall be!" and he stretched out his arms to enfold her. But Lettice, uttering a faint cry, glided from his vain clasp, and fled into the house.

In their deepest affections women rarely judge by outward show. The young Earl, gifted with all qualities to charm a lady's eye, had been loved as a brother—nothing more. The dreamy Patrick, in whose apparently passionless nature lay the mystery wherein such as Lettice ever delight—whose learning awed, while his weakness attracted tender sympathy—he it was who had unconsciously filled the treasure which a man giving all his substance could not gain—a woman's first, best love.

Her woor evidently dreamed not the truth. She saw him still walking where she had left him, or passing under her window, looking up rather anxiously, yet smiling. One thought only rose many weeks of wearying expectation for him who never came. How at first the hours flew winged with restless joy, how she lay down in hope and rose in hope, and said to herself, calmly smiling, "To-morrow—to-morrow!" How afterwards she strove to make those words into a daily balm to still fear and pain that would not sleep; how at last she breathed them wildly, hour by hour of each blank day, less believing in them than letting them up like a cry of despair which must be answered. But it never was answered; and the silence now had grown so black and dull around her, that it pressed down all struggles—left her not even strength for fears.

She had feared very much at first. The young Earl William, so sanguine, so bold, might have been deceived. The King's seeming bonity might be but assumed, until he could crush the poor remnant of the Ruthven blood. She pondered continually over the awful fate of the Gowrie plot; often at night, in her dreams, she saw the emasculated axe, the two heads, so beautiful and young, mouldering away on the Tolbooth. Sometimes beside them she saw another—Horror! she knew it well—the pale, boyish cheek—the thoughtful brow. Then she would wake in shudderings and cries; and falling on her knees, pray that wherever he was —whether or no he might gladden her eyes again —Heaven would keep him safe and have pity upon her.

Again she thought of him in prosperity, living honored and secure under the glory of the Ruthven line—forgetting old friends, as her father had said. Well, and what right had she to murmur? She did not—save that at times, even against her will, the selfish cry of weak human tenderness would rise up—"Alas, thou hast all things, and I—I perish for want!" But her conscience ever answered—"He neither knows nor sees, so with him there is no wrong."

Our Picture Gallery.

EGYPTIAN WAR CHARIOT.

For the above spirited engraving of an Egyptian War Chariot, we are indebted to the publishers of that excellent work (noticed last week in our columns,) the Henry or Joseph. We learn from said work, that the Egyptian chariots were generally drawn by oxen, instead of horses, which are capable of going at the rate of seven or eight miles an hour. In Bombay, and many other parts of the East Indies, oxen are now used, not only for drawing car riages, but for riding.

"Lettice," he said, "let there be peace and forgiveness between us. I will go away; you shall not be pained by more wooing. Only, ere I depart, tell me, is there any hope for me in patience or long waiting, or constant, much-enduring love?"

She shook her head mournfully.

"Then what was not mine to win is surely already won? Though you love not me, still you love: I read it in your eyes. If so, I think—I think it would be best mercy to tell me. Then I shall indulge in no vain hope: I shall learn to endure, perhaps to conquer at last. Lettice, tell me: one word—no more!"

But her quivering lips refused to utter it.

"Give me some sign—say, the sign that used to be one of death!—let your 'kerchief fall!"

For one moment her fingers instinctively clutched it tighter, then they slowly unclasped. The 'kerchief fell!

Without one word or look, Lord Gowrie turned—his face white, his whole countenance of his old proud step to the alley's end, then threw himself down on the cold, damp turf, as though he wished it had been an open grave.

When the little classic nest was, it was evident to Lettice that Lord Gowrie had unfolded all to his faithful and loving younger brother.—Still Patrick betrayed not his knowledge, and went on in his old dreamy and listless ways.—Once, as pausing in his reading, he saw Lettice glide from the room, pale and very sad, there was a momentary change in his look. It might be pity, or grief, or reproach, or what none could tell. He contrived so as to exchange no private word with her until the next morning; when, lounging in his old place, idly throwing pebbles into the river, and watching the watery circles grow, mix, and vanish, there came a low voice in his ear.

"Master Patrick Ruthven?"

He started to hear his full name uttered by lips once so frank and sisterly—but he took no notice.

"Well; what would you, Lettice?"

"It is early morning; there is no one risen but we two; come with me to the house, for I must speak with you. And what I say even the air must not carry. Come, Patrick; for the love of Heaven, come!"

Her face was haggard, her words wild. She dragged rather than led him into the room where the two boys had once used to study with her father. There she began speaking hurriedly.

"Did you hear nothing last night? no footsteps?—no voices?"

"No; yet I scarce slept."

"Nor I." And two young faces drooped, unable to meet each other's eyes. But soon Lettice went on: "At dawn, as I lay awake, it seemed as if there were voices beneath my window. I did not look: I thought it might be—"

"William sometimes rises very early," said the brother, gravely.

"It was not Lord Gowrie, for I heard them speak his name. Your hopes from King James were false! Oh, Patrick, there is danger—great danger! I have learned it all!"

"How?" And rousing himself, the young man regarded eagerly Lettice's agitated mien.

"I opened the lattice softly, and listened. When they went away, I followed stealthily to the water's edge. Patrick, they said that on the night but one after this, they will return and seize you in the King's name: Fly—fly! Do not let me lose forever both my brothers!"

And she caught his hands as in her childhood she used to do, when beseeching him to do for her sake many things which, from dreamy listlessness, he never would have done for his own.

"What must I do, Lettice—I, who know nothing of the world? Why did you not tell all this to William?"

"I—tell William?" She blushed scarlet and seemed struggling with deep emotion.

"Oh, true—true!" Patrick said, and there seemed a faint waking up in his passionless features. "No matter; I will at once go and tell my brother."

Lettice sat down to wait his return. All her manner was—Oh, William! poor William! at last to her whose whole future was at stake! I dare not be your wife, not loving you as a wife ought."

"It is quite true, then, you do not love me?" the young Earl muttered. But he was no other answer than a sad silence. After a while he broke out again, bitterly—"Either I have madly deceived myself, or you have deceived me. Why did you blush and tremble when we met last night? Why, before we met, did I see you gazing so longingly, so passionately, on the way I should have come? Was that look false, too?"

Lettice rose up from her knees, her face and neck incarnadine.

"My Lord of Gowrie, though you have honored me, and I am grateful, you have no right—"

"I have a right—that of one whose whole life you have withered; whom you have first struck blind, and then driven mad for love! Mistress Lettice—I—"

In speaking her name, his anger seemed to dispense and crumble away, even as the light touch shivers the molten glass. When again he said "Lettice," it was in a tone so humble, so heartbroken, that, hearing it, she, like a very woman, forgot and forgave all.

"I never did you wrong, William: I never deceived you loved me. In truth, I never dreamed of love at all, until—"

"Go on."

"I cannot—I cannot!" Again silence, again bitter tears.

After awhile Lord Gowrie came to her side, so changed, he might have lived years in that brief hour.

"And wherefore did you return?" Mechanical were the questions and replies, as though both spoke at random.

"Why did I return?"

"Yes—to danger. I had forgotten all that. Oh, Patrick, how shall we save you? Why did you not sail with William, if he has sailed?"

"He has! There was a passage for one only—his life was most precious—he is my elder brother, so I persuaded him to go on board; and then—I left him."

"Patrick—Patrick!" Unconsciously she looked up at him in her old childish, loving way, and her eyes were full of tears.

"Are you glad, Lettice?"

"Glad, because you have done a noble thing. But if through this you should be discovered and taken; if I—that is—we all—should lose you—Hush!" That instant her quick ear, sharpened with terror, heard down the river the sound of oars. "They are coming—those men I saw last night—they will have brought the King's warrant that I heard them speak of. It is too late. Oh, would that you at least had been saved!"

"I, and not William?" His words spoke grave reproach, but his looks belied his tone.

"I think not of William now. Why did he go and leave you to perish? But I will not leave you; Patrick, I will die with you—I—"

"Lettice!" He began to tremble, he took her hand and looked questioningly into her eyes.—There seemed a doubt suddenly parting off from his mind, so that all was light and day—ay, even though never every minute came the distant sounds which warned him of his danger.

"Hark! they are close upon us;" said Lettice, in an agonized whisper. "They will search the house through: what must be done?"

"I know not," answered Patrick, dreamily.

"But I know: come—come!"

She drew him cautiously into a hazel thicket close by, which, lying deep in shadow, furnished a safe hiding-place. Thinking a moment, she took off her black mantle, and wrapped it over Patrick's light doublet might not be seen through the boughs.

"We may escape them," she said; "we two have hidden here many a time when we were children."

"Ah, Lettice!" he sighed, "we were happy then! Even now, if William had not loved you—"

"Hush! they are landing; I hear their steps—keep close." She made him kneel so that her dress might hide him, and, as fearing that his fair flaxen curls might catch some stray moonbeam, she put her hands upon his hair.

Footsteps came nearer and nearer—life or death was in each tread. The terrified voice of David Calderwood was heard declaring that, hours since, the Scottish brothers had fled; and still the only answer was, "Search—search!"

In their agony the two young creatures—they were both so young!—knew almost by instinct; and Patrick's arms were wrapped round Lettice, as they used to be when she was a child. He whispered, "If I die, Lettice, love me!"

She pressed her cold lips upon his forehead, and that was the only vow which passed between them. The officers began to search the garden. David Calderwood followed, urging his feeble age as a plea for mercy. "Good Sirs, ye will no harm ye 'll no find as thing alive, save my pair bairn. If see he she is in his still. Lettice—Lettice, what are ye gaze?" cried the old man piteously.

"Go to your father—go!" murmured Patrick; but she was dead to all voices save his one.

"I'll help ye to seek in like bush and brake, if only to find my pair lassie; and I pray our sovereign lady Queen Elizabeth—"

Our sovereign lady King James of England and Scotland; that's the prayer now—no treason, old man," said one of the officers, giving him a buffet which made poor Davie stagger. Patrick Ruthven saw and started in his hiding-place.

"An owl in the bushes—Hollo there!" shouted the men.

Patrick and Lettice scarcely breathed. In her frenzy she clasped her arms passionately round his neck; her eyes, stretched out into the dark, fixed fire; she felt that she had the only a weapon at hand, she would have committed murder to save him. Vain—vain—all vain!

A crash in the bushes, a rough hand on Patrick's breast—"Ho! prisoners in the King's name!"

He was taken at last.

Whether she wept, or shrieked, or prayed, whether they took any farewell of one another or no, Lettice never remembered. All that remained in her memory after that awful moment was one sight—a boat gliding down the river in the moonlight; and one sound, of words which Patrick had contrived to whisper, "The Tower—remember the Tower!"

Lettice lay insensible for many hours. For her there were no farewells—when she awoke, the two brothers were gone. She found on her neck a golden chain, and on her finger a ring, the only tokens of the last passionate embraces which William had lavished on her, whom he now considered his betrothed, and which she then felt no more than one dead. But when they told her all this, she flung away the ring and chain, and prayed Heaven that she might die before ever Lord Gowrie came to claim her vows.

Miscellaneous.

COTTON—FACTS IN HISTORY.

The following statistics relative to the history of cotton, will be found interesting. We have taken extracts from the Encyclopedia Britannica:

Up to the beginning of the eighteenth century the small quantity of cotton wool which had been used in Europe was obtained from the Levant.

In 1781, the quantity imported into Great Britain, the five years' medium, from 1760 to 1765, amounted to 2,371,000 pounds.

In 1790, Mr. Wyatt first spun yarn cotton by machinery.

In 1793, on the 28th of November, the treaty for the settlement of Georgia, was presented a paper of cotton seed, by Mr. Philip Miller, of Chelsea, England, which reached Georgia in March, 1794.

In 1786, the first cotton was sent to Holland, by the Dutch colony of Surinam, in South America.

In 1791, two cotton factories were built in England, consisted to 1,300,000 pounds.

In 1795, at Birmingham, England, the first cotton spinning mill was built; its motive power was oxen or horses.

In 1799, only 4,000,000 was the entire value of manufactured cotton goods in England.

In 1781, Arkwright, (afterwards knighted,) obtained the first patent for his spinning-frame.

In 1787, the spinning-jenny was invented by James Hargreaves, which spun eight threads instead of one. Four millions, happily, this year, were about 5,000,000 pounds.

In 1774, a Bill prohibiting the exportation of machinery employed in the manufacture of cotton, received the royal assent of England. Five years after, the mule jenny was invented.

In 1781, Ireland first exported cotton goods into England, having sent over 200 pounds of raw cotton, and in the year eight threads intermediate, to the value of £157, and 17,322 pairs cotton stockings.

In 1785, England received but five cotton from Brazil. The same year, England received 11,400,000 pounds imports, and exported 482,000 pounds, raising from the quantity manufactured at 11,000,000.

In 1785, Rev. Mr. Cartwright invented the power-loom. The same year, Watt's steam engine was first applied to the cotton manufacture—in driving machinery in cotton manufactories.—The following year, chlorine was first used for bleaching.

In 1787, the first cotton-spinning machinery was set up in France.

In 1793, short staple cotton began to be cultivated in the South, and Sea Island cotton first introduced here.

In 1790, at Pawtucket, Rhode Island, Mr. Slater erected a cotton mill—the first in America.

In 1793, Eli Whitney, of New Haven, Connecticut, residing in Georgia, invented his first cotton-gin.

In 1795, Switzerland introduced cotton mills. The United States exported this year 9,000,000 pounds to England, prices in England from 22d. to 26d.; in America 10 cts. American exports amounted to $5,000,000.

In 1800, New Hampshire built her first cotton factory. Two years after, the first power-loom was introduced into the United States, at Waltham, Mass.

In 1805, first cotton factory erected in Lowell, Mass. The following year, Egypt first exported cotton to England.

In 1806, Roberts, in England, invented his self-acting mule spinner.

In the meantime, from £300,000, the value of cotton manufactures in England in 1760, it increased, in little more than half a century, to over £34,000,000.

In 1841, the Eastern States had invested, in cotton manufactures, a capital of $40,812,924.

On some future occasion, I will bring up the last ten years, and give a short history of the progress of manufactures in the Southern States.—N. O. Delta.

STEEL PENS.

The following interesting particulars are from the London Builder:

Steel pens are almost entirely manufactured by women and young girls; and it is probable that out of the two thousand gross (or upwards of eight millions) made in the business, not above one hundred are now found and fifty are of the male sex. The manufacture of pocketlers and penknives, gives employment to an additional number of women and children, variously estimated from two hundred to four hundred persons.

About the year 1820 or 1822, one gross of "fine pens" could be made and sold, wholesale, at the rate of 4*l.* 4*s.* the gross. In 1830, they had fallen to 2*s.*, and in 1832, to 6*d.* the gross. A better article is now sold for 6*d.* per gross. One factory alone in Birmingham produces them at the rate of no less than 40,000 gross, or 5,760,000 in a week—very nearly a million, or 960,000 per working day, or 320,000,000 per annum. At the very lowest calculation, 30 millions produces one penny, or 360 millions per year. The cheapest pens are sold as low as 3*d.* per gross, wholesale; and the price rises, with the elasticity and finish of the pens, up to 5*s.* 6*d.* and 6*s.* per gross.

Birmingham produces them all, and one establishment has the distinctive mark of five hundred different dealers in all parts of the country, as well as on the continent of Europe and America, for whom he is manufacturing or stamping to order.

The sheets of steel received from Sheffield are reduced to the required tensile by successive transits through the rolling-mill operations, tended by men and boys. Then reduced to the thickness of a steel pen, length about two feet, breadth two and a-half to three inches, the sheets are ready for punching out the blanks. This process is performed with very great rapidity—one girl of average industry and dexterity being able to punch out about one hundred gross a day.

The next operation is to place the blanks in a concave die, on which a slight touch from a convex punch, produces the required shape, that of the semi-tube. The slits and apertures to increase the elasticity and the maker's or vender's name or mark, are produced by a similar tool. Previously, however, the pen undergoes a variety of other processes. When complete all but the slit, it is cut and pliable, and may be hardened or tempered to the taste. Then a piece of fine lead. Being collected in "grosses," or "great-grosses," the pens are thrown into little square iron boxes by men, and placed in a furnace where they remain till hot and pen are of a white heat. They are then taken out and thrown hissing hot into pails or tanks of oil, when they may be broken like so many wafers; after draining they are made to receive rapidly in a perforated cylinder.

MARRIED AT LAST.

We clip the following from the local column of the N. Y. Sun:

Some four years since, a young man, residing in this city, formed the acquaintance of a young lady, and, after visiting her for some time, it was mutually agreed that they would be joined together in the bonds of wedlock. The day was determined upon, and with anxious hearts they looked forward to the time when they should be made one. About a week before this period arrived, the young man was called upon to deplore the loss of a fond and affectionate parent—this unforeseen event rendered it necessary that the marriage day should be postponed for some months. A few weeks before this time arrived, he received an advantageous business engagement, was proffered to the intended groom to visit California.

On consultation, the bride and her friends came to the conclusion that a second postponement of the day would prove beneficial in the end. After spending a year in San Francisco, the young man determined to settle there permanently; and, in accordance with this determination, wrote to the lady, and requested her to join him in California; at the same time naming the day for the consummation of their anxious hopes. With great joy, the lady made preparations for her departure, and, in course of time, reached California. Imagine her sorrow, on arriving there, to find her intended husband lying at the point of death, from an attack of brain fever. Months passed by, and, through the Providence of God, the sick man was sufficiently restored to be enabled, by the advice of the medical attendant, to return to the United States.

Gone were the bridal day was named, and, with joyful hearts, the lovers started for home, deeming it advisable not to be united until they should reach New York. On reaching Panama, the fears of our tale are attended with the Oregon Fever. After months of delay there, he again resolved, sufficiently to resume his journey to this city—not, however, until the 40th appointed time had passed by. Arriving—between the hours—united in one of the upper churches.

☞ The population of California is estimated that the date as for obtained, as 214,000, of whom 100,000 were engaged in mining during the past year. This will entitle California to three representatives in the United States House of Representatives.

THE WORLD'S FAIR.

The Royal Commissioners have issued a programme of the grand ceremony of opening the exhibition. The Regent will arrive at the building at 12 o'clock. A procession will be formed of the Royal Family, the Ministers, and the Commissioners will be immediately after. The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Archbishop of York, the Bishop of London, the Dean of Westminster, the Archbishop of Canterbury, will take their places on the right and left of the throne of state, in full dress. Prince Albert will then read a report of the proceedings of the Commissioners, to which the Queen will return the "gracious answer." An anthem will then be read on behalf of the foreign nations represented at the Exhibition, and the Queen will return a "gracious answer." The Archbishop of Canterbury, with four bishops, will say grace or deliver a royal procession will then be formed, and proceed the entire length of the building, returning to the transept, when the Queen will resume her place on the platform, and declare "our mission ended." Trumpets will be sounded while the building, a grand salute will be fired near the Serpentine, the Queen will return to Buckingham Palace, and from that time forward the public will be permitted to roam over the Crystal Palace, and enjoy the wonders of Queen's Farm!

At the above opening, exhibitors' attendants, and holders of season tickets will be present.

Among the articles to be seen at the Exhibition, will be the famous Rent India diamond, of which we have heard so much. It is a prominent position in the nave, the "Koh-i-nore" is to be exhibited, the Queen having consented to allow the stone to be on the firmament "once more in all its splendor." Regulations are now being taken for the safety, not of such a kind, that the security of the public with reference to the most precious of all gemstone stones will not go unguarded.

The American articles are all classified, and are well located and arranged upon display-related platforms, or counters and shelves covered with cotton or cloth. Regulations remark that the American machinery and useful rather than ornamental articles. The London News says: "It may be said of the American display generally, that it is evidently the production of a new country, where the useful arts are yet more in request than the ornamental." Of the manufactured cotton, in prints, it says: "Though they are very creditable evidences of the progress of the arts of peace, our friends on the other side of the Atlantic will pardon us for saying that they are not of that high class of goods—especially the prints—that our Manchester manufacturers need fear their competition, at least for the present." From the list of articles contributed, the contribution is very meagre, and the show of American articles will scarcely be equal to the Annual Exhibitions at State Fairs and Franklin Institutes.

The beautifully finished statue of the Greek Slave, by Powers, now the property of Mr. Hoult, an English gentleman, is exhibited in the American department of the Crystal Palace.

The price of a single season ticket has been raised from three guineas to four guineas, and a further advance is threatened.

An "Artillery Exhibition" has been opened in Regent Street, on a large scale, where duplicates of the same articles which are in the Crystal Palace will be exhibited, and offered for sale.

The French exhibitors have a greater number of packages in the Exhibition than any other nation. When the American exhibitors had their goods arranged, they turned in and assisted their French neighbors.

An American Gallantry.—The New York Sunday Messenger notices a young, intelligent, and interesting woman, residing within sixty miles of New York, who has, with the assistance of an aged and infirm father, saved twenty-one lives within the last fifteen years. The following particulars are given:—

"Miss Rose is the daughter of Captain Mason, who keeps the Light-House on Fairweather Island, situated midway between the harbors of Black Rock and Bridgeport, Connecticut. The island contains about five acres of land, and is about half a mile from the shore. Many disasters, it is known, have occurred to vessels driven around Montauk Point in a storm, and coming in the Sound to harbor, and the situation of this lady's post is a lonely one. It is said she can distinguish the shadow of the drowning mariner, and direct her barque in the darkest night. She can trim a boat, and manage as well as any man, and seems to make up in tact, what she lacks in strength, and never refuses to turn out in the severest gale. Her father is old and infirm. Our informant adds that she is a highly accomplished and literary lady, and patiently fashions in her manners, and that, although she occasionally visits New York, and other places in that vicinity, and has a large and most respectable acquaintance, many of whom know of these facts, they have never come to the knowledge of the public before. The late lamented Major Noah, who was remarkable for collecting the most interesting facts, by some means learned the particulars of this heroine's life, and published them in the Messenger. The writer understand that Captain Mason and his worthy helpmate have resided upon the island over twenty years, and brought up a family of five children, upon a salary of $400 a year, all of whom have an excellent education, and that they entertain a great many persons who visit the island, with true, old-fashioned hospitality."

Clippings.

☞ Water is nourishing. All you have to do is to put it in a pot over the fire, drop in a beef bone, rice, a few potatoes, and a little salt.—Among the hungry people this is called the water cure.

☞ "Gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed? What is your verdict?" "We find the prisoner not guilty, if he will leave town?"

☞ As life follows the other they complained bitterly of the heat, and said that he was born on the last day of the year, the last day of the month, and the last day of the week, and he had always been behindhand. He believed it would have been an hundred dollars in his pocket, if he had not been born at all.

☞ "I recollect," says Mr. Croker, in his "Researches in the South of Ireland," "once trying to convince a peasant that he might, with very little trouble, improve the state of his cabin, by building a shed for his pig, and having it in the chimney corner; but he coolly answering, 'Sure, then, and who has a better right to be in it? Isn't he the man of the house; and isn't it he that will pay the rint?'"

☞ "Short calls are the best," as the fly said when he lit on the stove-pipe.

☞ Quite a reform has recently taken place in the vicinity of the Five Points, New York.—About twelve hundred persons have joined the Temperance Society, of whom at least eight hundred were drunkards. Nearly two hundred children of the poor and wretched have been gathered into a day school, from the streets and hovels, gratuitously taught, and many of them fed and clothed.

☞ Whoever sincerely endeavors to do all the good he can, will probably do much more than he imagines, or will ever know to the day of judgment, when the secrets of all hearts shall be made manifest.

☞ The Boston Post, says a correspondent, thinks that, instead of lighting Minot's Ledge by a gas pipe running from the shore, it would be more practicable to catch a sperm whale, stuff him with cotton wick, bolt him to the rock, put fire to his tail, and let him burn. The writer thinks he would last in an inflammable state ten years!

☞ A Western critic records the following astonishing effects produced by Jenny Lind's Echo sang on one of the "milky mothers of the herd." On the last occasion of that song being sung in the town attended to, a venerable cow, disturbed from a passive revery in the Court-house yard by the delicious melody of Jenny's call, "Come Kine," immediately obeyed the summons by bellowing forth a responsive "I'm a coming." On inquiry, the writer says he learns, it appears that the maternal grandfather of Shanghai was imported stock, and that in the early part of her own life, she was fed on Swedish turnips.

☞ Before leaving Troy, King Kossuth offered his daughter as a victim to the gods, in order to win propitious breezes for the voyage home. We are reminded of this in modern society, when we hear of some match-making parent sacrificing his daughter to "raise the wind."

☞ Mosquitoes are very small insects, but one has been known to move a man weighing two hundred pounds, and keep him moving all night.

☞ A female writer says:—"Nothing looks worse on a lady than dotted stockings." Allow us to observe that stockings which are not dotted look much worse than darned ones.

☞ One of the best puns which we have ever seen is to a note to Mrs. Child's Biography of Madame de Staël. The dust of this celebrated lady are said to have been particulary clumsy.—On one occasion she represented a statue, the features of which were concealed. A gentleman being asked to guess who the statue was, glanced at the block of marble in which she stood, and answered, "Je vois le pied de Staël" —(Je pleurais).

SATURDAY EVENING POST.

GEORGE PETERSON, EDITOR.

PHILADELPHIA:
SATURDAY, MAY 31, 1851.

SEE THE QUANTITY OF THIS PAPER AND SET UP ACCORDINGLY FOR IT, AND IT ALONE. IT IS NOT A MERE REPRINT OF A DAILY PAPER.

TERMS, &c.

The terms of the POST are $2 00 paid in advance—$2, if not paid in advance. For $3 one copy is sent three years.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1 Copies, | - - - | $2 00 Per Annum. |
| 5 " | (and one to Agent, or the getter up of the Club,) | $10 00 " |
| 13 " | (and one to Agent, or the getter up of the Club,) | $25 00 " |
| 20 " | (and one to Agent, or the getter up of the Club,) | $30 00 " |

Subscribers wishing their papers changed, will please give the name of the Post Office to be changed from, as well as the Post Office they wish it hereafter sent to.

All persons addressing letters to us should be careful to give the name of the State, as well as of the town, in which they live.

Post Masters or others sending for Clubs, would confer a favor by writing to us on a separate piece of paper, when they send the names.

We trust our old friends, the Postmasters, will assist themselves and get up large Clubs for the Mammoth Post; or if they do not feel inclined to take advantage of our liberal offer themselves, that they will draw our prospectus to some other individual and responsible person who will be willing to do so. It must be remembered that the postage is just the same on a first class paper, when the numbers and pages of the small[er] reprints.

OUR NOVELETS.

Next week we shall conclude the story begun in the present paper, called TRUE LOVE; Or, The Last of the Revevens." We may remark in passing, that we think this story written with a purpose and particularly the concluding portion of it. It is not a common "cut and dried" love story by any means.

The week after next we design commencing the Original Novelet of

THE TEXAN HUNTRESS:

OR,

THE ENTHUSIAST'S DREAM.

BY C. W. WEBBER,

Author of "The Hand in the Eye," &c.

This story is founded on one of Mr. Webber's experiences in the wilds of Texas. We expect to complete it in two or three numbers.

SECESSION.

The Convention of the numerous State Rights Associations in South Carolina, recently held in Charleston, was attended by between four and five hundred Delegates. The members were quite enthusiastic, and nearly unanimous for prompt action. The resolutions were adopted with great unanimity, and were for speedy secession, with or without the co-operation of other States. The State Convention was advised to begin the movement as early as possible, and it was thought that by the first of February next, a declaration would be issued to the world, announcing to it that South Carolina had taken her position as a "free and independent" Commonwealth. Nine distinguished Delegates were then appointed a Central Committee, and the Convention adjourned sine die, with a prayer—the deliberations being characterized, according to the telegraphic reports, by "the greatest decorum and dignity."

Three of the speakers, Messrs. Rutledge, Orr and Barnwell, appeared to favor more moderate counsels, and a letter was read from Langdon Cheves, also deprecating separate State action; but as is usually the case in popular deliberations, radical and extreme views were greatly in the ascendency.

We also have advices from Washington, stating that the Government is not seriously alarmed by these demonstrations. That the Administration will take no notice of South Carolina as a State, but will treat its people as separately subject to the Federal Union. That so long as secession remains simply an abstraction, it will not be humbled.—But that if the laws of the United States, and its officers, are forcibly interfered with, the Government will use its power, to the utmost, if necessary, to enforce the laws, and to protect the officers in the discharge of their duties. The United States Marshal of South Carolina is said to have recently visited Washington, for the purpose of receiving full instructions.

On the other hand, the leaders of the South Carolina movement, it is averred, contemplate to commence their proceedings for secession during the meeting of Congress, trusting for sufficient sympathy in that body to prevent the passage of any severe laws against them, and even to foster the President in the use of such power as he already legally possesses. This certainly is an adroit move, and one which may be followed up perhaps, for a time, with considerable success.

So far as we have means of knowing the sentiments of the great mass of the Northern and Western people upon this subject, a very general desire exists that the game of Secession should be now played out. Of course, there are a number of timid gentlemen who are always for "putting off the evil day," but we do not think these represent the "bone and sinew," the sturdy, courageous heart of the North and West. While we think there is very little ill-feeling against our South Carolina brethren, there is a growing desire to see, as a worthy gentleman once expressed it, "the crisis brought to a focus," that we may know what will come of it—a desire to know the worst; to have the strength of the Union tested once for all, now and forever. We see no mistake in the sentiments of Northern and Western public opinion, but such is our present impression of its character.

For our own part, "we have been led" (as our Quaker friends say,) of late, to contemplate with more aversion than formerly, any resort to the law of violence, especially against our brethren. If the matter was left to our decision, therefore, we think South Carolina would be allowed to secede from the Union as soon as she pleased, and with as little pleasure, this matter of separate sovereignty. We also think the result of such a course would be, that ten years would not elapse before she would be an applicant for re-admission, permanently cured of the "come-outerism" with which she has been so long afflicted. But we have little hope—none at all, in fact—of such peaceable views commending themselves at the present time to any large portion of the people of this country. We look upon it as inevitable, that any attempt at secession, will be met by the strong arm of the rest of the Union, and that such a movement would be ultimately repressed at any cost of blood and treasure. Because we believe this; because we know that our own feelings and judgment has been one year ago, would have counselled this; and because we are conscious that in that old feeling and judgment we represented, more than now, the feeling and judgment of the great majority of the American people; we would conjure the people of South Carolina—if our words would be listened to—to abandon an enterprise that, in all human probability, can never succeed, even if its success were desirable. But the time has gone by for any such mistakes, for such appeals to have the least effect; "revolutions do not move backwards," but go on to victory or to utter ruin. Therefore we believe this secession movement must (unless there is some unexpected change in the position of affairs,) to the very nature and constitution of things, before many years now, come to a head—the sooner, perhaps, the better, for all parties—and be decided one way or the other. What that result will be, putting all questions of right and justice aside, it needs, we think, but a shrewd and pencil, without even the aid of a "ready reckoner," to determine.

THE HILLOTYPE.

We are informed that as soon as the patent for this invention have been secured as far as possible in Europe, measures will be taken to bring it before the people of this country, in a mode that will extend the advantages of it to every worthy Daguerreotypist in the Union, upon the payment of a moderate and reasonable sum. Mr. Hill is, we are informed, very desirous that while he realizes what he has a right to expect from the success of such an important invention, it shall not operate so as to injure the thousands who now have all their earthly means invested in the Daguerreotype business. And for this desire on his part to prevent the fellow artists from loss, we highly commend him. The "sun is my brother's keeper" policy, which is so common in the world, is only fit to be pursued by the spiritual descendants of Cain.

It is Dr. Prudhomme's 1—It has recently been decided by Judge Hall, of Buffalo, in opposition to a long line of precedents, that a dog can be the subject of a larceny—having an intrinsic value. This is considered a great triumph of the dogs over the sausage makers.

THE LAST DANGER.

The last peril to the Union seemed likely to spread made by Mr Henry Bulwer, in New York, in which he alluded to the well known fact that the Celts of old did not trade themselves.

Some of our Irish fellow citizens in this city took this remark in high dudgeon, held an indignation meeting, and drew up a memorial to President Fillmore, calling him to take measures to have Mr Bulwer punished for the following extraordinary remark:

He has ordered the lines of fortifications, now being and most fortunately finished and completed, at the entrance of the harbor of this city, to be called "Fort Bulwer," in honor of the aforesaid Bulwer, and according to the telegraphic reports, by "the greatest decorum and dignity."

Three of the speakers, Messrs. Butler, Orr and Barnwell, appeared to favor more moderate counsels, and a letter was read from Langdon Cheves, also deprecating separate State action; but as is usually the case in popular deliberations, radical and extreme views were greatly in the ascendency.

We also have advices from Washington, stating that the Government is not seriously alarmed by these demonstrations. That the Administration will take no notice of South Carolina as a State, but will treat its people as separately subject to the Federal Union. That so long as secession remains simply an abstraction, it will not be humbled.—But that if the laws of the United States, and its officers, are forcibly interfered with, the Government will use its power, to the utmost, if necessary, to enforce the laws, and to protect the officers in the discharge of their duties. The United States Marshal of South Carolina is said to have recently visited Washington, for the purpose of receiving full instructions.

On the other hand, the leaders of the South Carolina movement, it is averred, contemplate to commence their proceedings for secession during the meeting of Congress, trusting for sufficient sympathy in that body to prevent the passage of any severe laws against them, and even to foster the President in the use of such power as he already legally possesses. This certainly is an adroit move, and one which may be followed up perhaps, for a time, with considerable success.

So far as we have means of knowing the sentiments of the great mass of the Northern and Western people upon this subject, a very general desire exists that the game of Secession should be now played out. Of course, there are a number of timid gentlemen who are always for "putting off the evil day," but we do not think these represent the "bone and sinew," the sturdy, courageous heart of the North and West. While we think there is very little ill-feeling against our South Carolina brethren, there is a growing desire to see, as a worthy gentleman once expressed it, "the crisis brought to a focus," that we may know what will come of it—a desire to know the worst; to have the strength of the Union tested once for all, now and forever. We see no mistake in the sentiments of Northern and Western public opinion, but such is our present impression of its character.

For our own part, "we have been led" (as our Quaker friends say,) of late, to contemplate with more aversion than formerly, any resort to the law of violence, especially against our brethren. If the matter was left to our decision, therefore, we think South Carolina would be allowed to secede from the Union as soon as she pleased, and with as little pleasure, this matter of separate sovereignty. We also think the result of such a course would be, that ten years would not elapse before she would be an applicant for re-admission, permanently cured of the "come-outerism" with which she has been so long afflicted. But we have little hope—none at all, in fact—of such peaceable views commending themselves at the present time to any large portion of the people of this country. We look upon it as inevitable, that any attempt at secession, will be met by the strong arm of the rest of the Union, and that such a movement would be ultimately repressed at any cost of blood and treasure. Because we believe this; because we know that our own feelings and judgment has been one year ago, would have counselled this; and because we are conscious that in that old feeling and judgment we represented, more than now, the feeling and judgment of the great majority of the American people; we would conjure the people of South Carolina—if our words would be listened to—to abandon an enterprise that, in all human probability, can never succeed, even if its success were desirable. But the time has gone by for any such mistakes, for such appeals to have the least effect; "revolutions do not move backwards," but go on to victory or to utter ruin. Therefore we believe this secession movement must (unless there is some unexpected change in the position of affairs,) to the very nature and constitution of things, before many years now, come to a head—the sooner, perhaps, the better, for all parties—and be decided one way or the other. What that result will be, putting all questions of right and justice aside, it needs, we think, but a shrewd and pencil, without even the aid of a "ready reckoner," to determine.

THE HILLOTYPE.

We are informed that as soon as the patent for this invention have been secured as far as possible in Europe, measures will be taken to bring it before the people of this country, in a mode that will extend the advantages of it to every worthy Daguerreotypist in the Union, upon the payment of a moderate and reasonable sum. Mr. Hill is, we are informed, very desirous that while he realizes what he has a right to expect from the success of such an important invention, it shall not operate so as to injure the thousands who now have all their earthly means invested in the Daguerreotype business. And for this desire on his part to prevent the fellow artists from loss, we highly commend him. The "sun is my brother's keeper" policy, which is so common in the world, is only fit to be pursued by the spiritual descendants of Cain.

It is Dr. Prudhomme's 1—It has recently been decided by Judge Hall, of Buffalo, in opposition to a long line of precedents, that a dog can be the subject of a larceny—having an intrinsic value. This is considered a great triumph of the dogs over the sausage makers.

OUR NOVELETS.

Next week we shall conclude the story begun in the present paper, called TRUE LOVE; Or, The Last of the Revevens." We may remark in passing, that we think this story written with a purpose and particularly the concluding portion of it. It is not a common "cut and dried" love story by any means.

The week after next we design commencing the Original Novelet of

THE TEXAN HUNTRESS:

OR,

THE ENTHUSIAST'S DREAM.

BY C. W. WEBBER,

Author of "The Hand in the Eye," &c.

This story is founded on one of Mr. Webber's experiences in the wilds of Texas. We expect to complete it in two or three numbers.

SECESSION.

The Convention of the numerous State Rights Associations in South Carolina, recently held in Charleston, was attended by between four and five hundred Delegates. The members were quite enthusiastic, and nearly unanimous for prompt action. The resolutions were adopted with great unanimity, and were for speedy secession, with or without the co-operation of other States. The State Convention was advised to begin the movement as early as possible, and it was thought that by the first of February next, a declaration would be issued to the world, announcing to it that South Carolina had taken her position as a "free and independent" Commonwealth. Nine distinguished Delegates were then appointed a Central Committee, and the Convention adjourned sine die, with a prayer—the deliberations being characterized, according to the telegraphic reports, by "the greatest decorum and dignity."

Three of the speakers, Messrs. Butler, Orr and Barnwell, appeared to favor more moderate counsels, and a letter was read from Langdon Cheves, also deprecating separate State action; but as is usually the case in popular deliberations, radical and extreme views were greatly in the ascendency.

We also have advices from Washington, stating that the Government is not seriously alarmed by these demonstrations. That the Administration will take no notice of South Carolina as a State, but will treat its people as separately subject to the Federal Union. That so long as secession remains simply an abstraction, it will not be humbled.—But that if the laws of the United States, and its officers, are forcibly interfered with, the Government will use its power, to the utmost, if necessary, to enforce the laws, and to protect the officers in the discharge of their duties. The United States Marshal of South Carolina is said to have recently visited Washington, for the purpose of receiving full instructions.

On the other hand, the leaders of the South Carolina movement, it is averred, contemplate to commence their proceedings for secession during the meeting of Congress, trusting for sufficient sympathy in that body to prevent the passage of any severe laws against them, and even to foster the President in the use of such power as he already legally possesses. This certainly is an adroit move, and one which may be followed up perhaps, for a time, with considerable success.

So far as we have means of knowing the sentiments of the great mass of the Northern and Western people upon this subject, a very general desire exists that the game of Secession should be now played out. Of course, there are a number of timid gentlemen who are always for "putting off the evil day," but we do not think these represent the "bone and sinew," the sturdy, courageous heart of the North and West. While we think there is very little ill-feeling against our South Carolina brethren, there is a growing desire to see, as a worthy gentleman once expressed it, "the crisis brought to a focus," that we may know what will come of it—a desire to know the worst; to have the strength of the Union tested once for all, now and forever. We see no mistake in the sentiments of Northern and Western public opinion, but such is our present impression of its character.

For our own part, "we have been led" (as our Quaker friends say,) of late, to contemplate with more aversion than formerly, any resort to the law of violence, especially against our brethren. If the matter was left to our decision, therefore, we think South Carolina would be allowed to secede from the Union as soon as she pleased, and with as little pleasure, this matter of separate sovereignty. We also think the result of such a course would be, that ten years would not elapse before she would be an applicant for re-admission, permanently cured of the "come-outerism" with which she has been so long afflicted. But we have little hope—none at all, in fact—of such peaceable views commending themselves at the present time to any large portion of the people of this country. We look upon it as inevitable, that any attempt at secession, will be met by the strong arm of the rest of the Union, and that such a movement would be ultimately repressed at any cost of blood and treasure. Because we believe this; because we know that our own feelings and judgment has been one year ago, would have counselled this; and because we are conscious that in that old feeling and judgment we represented, more than now, the feeling and judgment of the great majority of the American people; we would conjure the people of South Carolina—if our words would be listened to—to abandon an enterprise that, in all human probability, can never succeed, even if its success were desirable. But the time has gone by for any such mistakes, for such appeals to have the least effect; "revolutions do not move backwards," but go on to victory or to utter ruin. Therefore we believe this secession movement must (unless there is some unexpected change in the position of affairs,) to the very nature and constitution of things, before many years now, come to a head—the sooner, perhaps, the better, for all parties—and be decided one way or the other. What that result will be, putting all questions of right and justice aside, it needs, we think, but a shrewd and pencil, without even the aid of a "ready reckoner," to determine.

THE HILLOTYPE.

We are informed that as soon as the patent for this invention have been secured as far as possible in Europe, measures will be taken to bring it before the people of this country, in a mode that will extend the advantages of it to every worthy Daguerreotypist in the Union, upon the payment of a moderate and reasonable sum. Mr. Hill is, we are informed, very desirous that while he realizes what he has a right to expect from the success of such an important invention, it shall not operate so as to injure the thousands who now have all their earthly means invested in the Daguerreotype business. And for this desire on his part to prevent the fellow artists from loss, we highly commend him. The "sun is my brother's keeper" policy, which is so common in the world, is only fit to be pursued by the spiritual descendants of Cain.

It is Dr. Prudhomme's 1—It has recently been decided by Judge Hall, of Buffalo, in opposition to a long line of precedents, that a dog can be the subject of a larceny—having an intrinsic value. This is considered a great triumph of the dogs over the sausage makers.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The latest Impartial dates of the late revolutionary changes in the principal countries in Europe. The details which follow are from the 11th, though some have been received to the 13th.

The English Chartists are beginning to get up meetings, and are trying to get up a demonstration in favor of Kossuth. The meeting is announced up by Feargus O'Connor, to be held in London, at which the Duke of Cambridge is to preside.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, on Sunday, offered up the collect of the day in the Queen's Chapel, "for all conditions of men," and "for the whole state of Christ's Church militant here in earth," and "for the Queen's Majesty," and "for the Royal Family," and "for all the Bishops, Pastors, and Ministers of Christ's Holy Church," and "for the Parliament assembled," and "for the Navy and Army," and "for the Commons," and "for all sorts and conditions of men," and "for the Queen's Majesty's Council," and "for the Judges," and "for the Magistrates," and "for the Clergy," and "for the People," and "for the Universities of England," and "for all Schools of Learning," and "for all Christian Congregations," and "for the Jews," and "for Turks, Infidels, and Heretics," and "for all that are in danger," and "for all that are desolate and oppressed," and "for all that are sick and sorrowful," and "for all that are in prison," and "for all that are in the perils of the sea," and "for all that are in the battle," and "for all that are in the agonies of death," and "for all that are in the bondage of any sin," and "for all that are in the snares of evil men," and "for all that are in any trouble or adversity," and "for all that are in the uttermost parts of the earth," and "for all that are in the Holy Land," and "for all that are in the Turkish dominions," and "for all that are in the Russian dominions," and "for all that are in the Austrian dominions," and "for all that are in the Prussian dominions," and "for all that are in the Hungarian dominions," and "for all that are in the Italian dominions," and "for all that are in the French dominions," and "for all that are in the Spanish dominions," and "for all that are in the Portuguese dominions," and "for all that are in the Belgian dominions," and "for all that are in the Dutch dominions," and "for all that are in the Swedish dominions," and "for all that are in the Danish dominions," and "for all that are in the Swiss dominions," and "for all that are in the Greek dominions," and "for all that are in the Roman dominions

SATURDAY EVENING POST.

PHILADELPHIA:
SATURDAY, MAY 17, 1851.

SATURDAY EVENING POST
STEAM-POWER BOOK AND JOB PRINTING OFFICE.
No. 66 South Third Street, Philada.,
Where Books, Pamphlets, Hand Bills, Way Bills, Circulars, Bill Heads, Cards, Labels, &c., are printed with dispatch, in the neatest manner, and on the most reasonable terms.
DEACON & PETERSON, Proprietors.

THIS YEAR'S CAMPAIGN.

In the Chronicle of Mrs. Southworth's Novelets, we shall publish shorter novelets and stories from the pens of other well-known writers. We have these now on hand, which shall be published as early as possible, viz.:

The Rose Maid, by T. S. Arthur.

The Bonds or our Brethren, by Mrs. Caroline Lee Hentz, author of "The Mob City," &c.

The Three Brothers, by C. W. Webber, author of "The Shot in the Eye," &c.

Reports of Lectures, the Creeds of the Foreign Protestant Reformers, Congressional Reports, General News, Wit and Humor, &c., &c., shall be given as of old.

FOX, PITT, &c.

From an original letter of the distinguished William Pinckney, written in 1797, and recently published in the Washington Republic, we take the following impressions of some of the celebrated English characters of that day. Mr. Pinckney was then acting as one of the U. S. Commissioners, under Jay's treaty, to settle the claims for British spoliations. Mr. Pinckney says:

"It is the misfortune of almost all travellers that they set out with expectations so extravagant, that their gratification is absolutely impossible. This one is a great measure my lot, and the consequence has been frequent disappointment.

"I presume it is to be attributed to my too sanguine anticipation that I have seen Mr. Sheridan in but one of his favorite characters without emotion or approbation; that I have heard Mr. Fox on the most interesting and weighty subjects without discovering that he is an orator; that I have heard Mr. Grey on the same occasions without thinking him above mediocrity; in short, that I have seen and heard much that I have told I should admire, without admiring it at all. Mr. Pitt, indeed, has not disappointed me. He is truly a wonderful man. I never heard so clear and masterly a reasoner, or a more effectual declaimer. They have all one fault, however; they do not understand the power which may be given to the human voice by tones and modulation.

"In consequence of our public character, you and myself are allowed to sit under the gallery of the House of Commons—a privilege of which you will suppose I do not omit to avail myself. I could sit there forever to listen to Mr. Pitt.—In argument he is beyond example correct and perspicuous, and in declamation energetic and commanding. His style might serve as a model of classic elegance, and has no defect, unless it be that it is sometimes overloaded with parenthesis. You have seen and heard him, and therefore need not be told that his manner is against him. His voice is full and impressive, and his articulation unusually distinct. I thought at first that his pronunciation was too precise and mincing. It is, in fact, a sort of spelling pronunciation, that gives unexceptionable importance to every syllable; but I am now familiarized with this scholastic particularity, and hardly feel its impropriety. I observe that he, as well as Mr. Fox, chews his periods with a cadence unknown in America. I think it unessential and harsh. It is, however, so completely fashionable, that you must with it even in West minister Hall. Mr. Fox, I think that he has a vigorous mind, but that he is a speaker (in spite of nature and his stars). He is, notwithstanding, generally powerful in debate. I have heard Mr. Erskine once in the House of Commons. I thought nothing of him; but I am assured by good judges that at the bar he is formidable, and indeed eloquent, although he makes no figure in Parliament. I do not understand this, but I know one half of the fact to be true in Mr. Erskine's case.

"Mr. Secretary Dundas is mediocre; and I incline to think that in America the art of speaking is more advanced than in any other country. We have, it is true, swarms of mere orators, but we have also more (I mean a greater number of) able speakers than are to be found here or elsewhere. The bar in this country are sound lawyers, but nothing more; in America they are something more.

"Perhaps in all this I make my estimates a little too partially, and with too much pride of country about me; but I am writing to you, who have the same prejudices, and can make allowance for me."

MURDEROUS MOVEMENT.—The N. Y. Herald, of last Sunday, says:

Yesterday, a despatch was received here from Washington, offering orders to charter a steamer for the service of the Government, for the space of less than twenty days, not more than ninety days, to cruise from this port to Florida. It is believed that this destination is connected with that the despatch has reference to the secession in the South. The Brother Jonathan, North America, and other steamers were in requisition here, but finally the Cherokee, City was fixed upon. She is to sail with sealed orders, and not to be more than five hundred miles at any time from land. She is not to carry more than 500 men.

We think it more probable that she is intended to intercept some Cuban invasion movement.

IMPORTANT FROM NICARAGUA.—A late arrival brings the gratifying news of the entire withdrawal of the British naval forces at San Juan, the probable immediate abandonment of the ridiculous Mosquito protectorate by the English, and the surrender back to the Nicaraguan Government of the port of San Juan, and all the territory over which the British have so long unjustly held sway!

BOARD OF HEALTH.—The number of deaths during the last week in this city was 167—adults 85 and children 82

Clippings.

☞ "You can't think," says a lady, writing to an editor, "how much need the deaths and marriages do me. If you knew how I love deaths and marriages, you would have them in every paper. The elopements and murders are beautiful, but the common deaths and marriages are more satisfactory. You crowd the married ones so close together, that it seems as if you consulted their happiness and wishes, even in your types."

☞ A friend relates a case, in which a boy in school, who imbibed his politics and his intelligence from a Democratic father, refused to copher in Federal Money.

☞ Go to a man in business hours only on business. Transact your business, and go about your business, that he may have time to do his business.

☞ A woman's head is always influenced by her heart; but a man's heart is influenced by his head.

☞ A Spanish writer says, that English women rarely laugh aloud, considering it vulgar and unlady-like; while Spanish women indulge in a sort of double shout, a short musical arpeggio.

☞ The proceeds of Jenny Lind's recent charity concert in this city amounted to $6,241 00—which was divided among seven charitable associations.

☞ In dry pastures dig for water on the brow of a hill; springs are more frequently near the surface of a height than in a vale.

☞ Speaking of Niagara Falls, "Well, Sam," said a friend, "what do you think of Niagara Falls, upon the whole,—Oh, what a fall is here, my countrymen!"

☞ If man would but obey the advice which they bestow gratuitously on others, what a reformation would be effected in their characters!

☞ A man embarrassed in his circumstances, and conducting them improdently, likes best to continue in the dark; he will not gladly reckon up the debtor entries he is charged with. But, on the other hand, there is nothing to a prudent manager more pleasant than daily to set before himself the sum of his gaining thereby.

☞ The less useful things are, the more they interest foolish people. The clown that throws a double somerset is much better patronized than the philosopher who undertakes to revolutionize society. The owner of the "industrious flea" realized a fortune; but he got up an exhibition of the same number of industrious men, he would have brought up in the Court of Bankruptcy.

☞ "What d'ye think the chaps where call a hat?" said a jolly Jack tar, whose vessel was lying in the harbor of Valparaiso, to a shipmate enjoying a pipe by his side. "I don't know," replied his messmate, "some outlandish name or other, I suppose." "Why, they call it a sombrero," said Jack. "The crazed fools," said the other, "why can't they just as easy say hat at once."

☞ "What is fun? A hopeful schoolmate to the really paltry, but a rule and harmless slander to the contemptuous, honest and upright.

☞ The three-year-old said to the infant, "Come, boy, Come, boy." And they went by.

☞ There never was a right unforced but it succeeded. Patience and patience, we shall win at the last.

☞ A San Francisco letter states that Professor Shepherd has discovered within one hundred miles of that city, what he termed the "Cayote Mountain," which may be seen from a distance of fifteen miles, and by the trunk and tusks all in a state of good preservation. Specimens of cellulose rock, petrified wood, &c., &c., have been sent to the World's Fair in London.

☞ An Instance cotton stalk from Abbeville will be exhibited at the World's Fair. The plant was 20 feet high, and bore 1,000 bolls.

☞ There are three "preachers of the gospel" in the Indiana State Prison, convicted for horse-stealing.

☞ New Breed of Rabbits.—At a recent Agricultural Exhibition held at Chatham, England, a new variety of rabbits was exhibited, chiefly remarkable for the enormous length of their ears. In one instance, a male, the length of the ears was 21½ inches; in another, a female, 21½ inches, with a length of nearly 5 inches.

☞ At a late trial, somewhere in Vermont, the defendant, who was not familiar with the multitude of words which the law employs to make a very trifling charge, after listening a while to the reading of the indictment, jumped up and said, "Those 'ere allegations is false, and that 'ere affidavit knows it!"

☞ He Was and was not One Wife.—We are in the Holy Scriptures that Jacob would not have submitted to Joseph's residence in Egypt, nor would the Virgin Mary have consented to the death of her son and Saviour; yet from both these events, affecting as they were at the time, the most precious of our blessings arose.

☞ N. P. Willis is of the opinion that "there is no more harm in improving the complexion by means of Nature in the distribution of white and red, than there is in looking up a fascinating figure which, at night, hangs over the back head of a chair!" What a horrible sum!

☞ The Rev. Mr. Chreiss says: "I wish that we could create a general passion for gardening and horticulture. We want more beauty about our homes—more to attach us to our homes. The success of our childhood are the memories of our future years. Let our dwellings be bowered with plants and flowers. Flowers are the playthings of childhood, and the ornaments of the grave; they raise smiling looks to men, and grateful ones to God."

☞ The Home Journal says that Grisi, the dancer, who is coming to this country, is "a fine artist, but a red-haired and freckled young lady, whose talent has made her a fame without the aid of beauty."

☞ Railway Sc.—In conversation the other day with a gentleman who formerly neglected much in transatlantic politics, but has resided many years in this country, and is a warm friend of our Republican institutions, we had occasion with the remark,—"But, sir, after all, it is to your unceasing vigilance that you Americans owe every thing—your liberties, your walking-canes and your umbrellas."

☞ A St. Louis gentleman recently arrived in Cincinnati from Paris, having been only thirteen days, less three hours, on the journey.

POSTSCRIPT.

THREE DAYS LATER.

By the arrival of the Cambria at Halifax, we have three days later news from Europe. We are indebted for a telegraphic despatch to the kindness of the North American of this city.

The British and Continental news is quite unimportant.

The all-absorbing topic in England, is the great Exhibition, which was opened by Her Majesty, Queen Victoria, on May 1, the day in the presence of 30,000 persons, with great pomp, and without disorder or accident.

On the 2nd inst., the Russell Ministry was defeated by a motion by Mr. Hume, to curtail the operation of the property tax to one year.

The Jewish Disabilities Bill had been read a second time.

The tide of emigration from England and Ireland continued unabated.

All danger of a ministerial crisis in Paris has passed away, and all is again correct that Louis Napoleon is making great efforts to prolong his time of office.

The Portuguese insurrection had subsided.

Austria and Russia have demanded of the Sultan of Turkey, that he retain Kossuth and his fellow patriots for two years longer. The Sultan is inclined to refuse, and threw himself on the protection of England and France.

There is nothing new from Germany.

Cotton.—There has not been much fluctuation since the sailing of the Arctic, but prices for the week have declined ¼d per lb. on American descriptions. The sales of the week are 22 250 bales, and the market closed tamely. Trade in Manchester extremely dull.

Foreign Items.

A Water Cure.—An Irish paper says that Wexford has been rid of beggars by a very simple process. The magistrates imprisoned the vagrants for twenty-four hours, and had them well washed. This discipline was found to act wonderfully well, for not one submitted to it twice.

The Dublin papers announce the conversion of four persons from the Roman Catholic Church. One of them was a famous Corn Exchange orator in O'Connell's time.

Sir James Sutherland Mackintosh, the "accentric" Scottish baronet, was lately committed to the House of Correction in London, for drunkenness and disorderly conduct in the streets.

The following specimen of womanly assumption was given in one of the courts returns in England:—"Jones ——, wife, head of the family, manglingwoman. John ——, husband, turns my mangle."

The Morning Advertiser states that Dr. Henderson, late Bishop of Clifton," intended to build a cathedral with Miss Talbot's fortune of £35,000, and that, in certain anticipation of touching the money, he purchased the land, value £1,500, whereby he is now somewhat embarrassed.

During the la te rage for sending petitions, numerously signed, to the Queen, a boys' school was visited by a petition which the scholars rose to sign. One little boy, however, tried to escape, and upon being asked to sign, absolutely refused to attach his name. What was the objection? Was he a Catholic? No. Were his parents Catholics? No. Then why wouldn't he sign? After a long time the urchin blubbered it out. "I don't want to sign—because—because—the Queen would see my bad writing."

Working Sails by a Steam Engine.—A ship called the Madora, is about to sail from Glasgow, Scotland, for San Francisco, which has on board a small steam engine, intended to weigh the anchor, pump ship, hoist the topsails, and do any other hard hauling that may be required, in addition to hoisting out and in the cargo. It is placed upon deck near the fore hatchway, and is covered by an erection about as large as a cook's galley.

Five London travelling editors recently called upon the King of Denmark, and were shown through the castle grounds, and treated afterwards to a collation. A shrewd monarch that.

Mrs. Elizabeth Barrett Browning has a new volume of poems in press, entitled "Cam Gold Windows." The Cam Gold is the residence of Mrs. Browning in Florence.

A man found guilty of a felony at the Central Criminal Court, Ireland, recently, entreated the Court to "deal leniently with him, and give him a short imprisonment, as he was particularly anxious to see the Great Exhibition."

A Bigoted Father.—The late Duke of Newcastle, a bigoted Tory, bequeathed the whole of his property to his second son, the old est, to whom it would have legally fallen, not having been an staunch a protestant as his father wished.

A French gentleman was recently fined for teaching reading, writing, and arithmetic, gratuitously to his own servants and two or three neighbors, amounting in all to a class of ten people! The French law does not allow of such teaching without authorization, and Mr. Sellier had a gratis had that a second offence of the same nature would subject him to imprisonment.

"Dora," the infant daughter of Charles Dickens, died in London on the 14th ult.

Rev. Dr. Wolff, the converted Jew, is on a tour through Scotland.

On the 22nd ultimo, Lord Edward Howard, brother of the Duke of Norfolk, presented a petition to the Lord Chancellor, for a reference to a master to inquire whether it would be proper and beneficial to Miss Augusta Talbot, to accept a proposal of marriage made by him. The order was made, and we trade the "Talbot case." Lord Edward is, of course, a Catholic.

It was stated on the 26th ultimo, that 20,000 season tickets for the Great Exhibition had been sold.

Lady Bulwer Lytton has just published a new novel called "Kirton Bailey."

The Journal de Havre states, that a few days ago, as the fishermen of Fecamp, a town of 12,000 inhabitants of Inguerville was preparing their nets, the shrub, a poor cobbler remarked to a friend: "How strange it is that a man who possesses everything to make his happy should be cut off, whilst a poor devil like I am, who have nothing to expect but misery, will probably live long?" and that the moment he had uttered the last word, he swallowed and fell dead.

General News.

Anti-Slavery Convention at Syracuse.—As no house could be procured in the city of New York, for love or money, the Convention was held in the Market Hall, Syracuse; a $10,000 hand being given by private individuals to meet any damages arising from a riot or other disturbance. Among those present were Mrs. Abby Kelly Foster, Wendell L. Garrison, George Thompson, Mr. Charles, Mr. Wright, (editor of the "Commonwealth," Boston,) Frederick Douglass, Mr. Burleigh, (a New England poet,) Mr. Whitmer, of Pennsylvania, Mr. Gay, &c., &c.

The speeches made have been highly revolutionary and Anti-Union. Mr. Pillsbury, for instance, said:

We are at this time in the midst of a revolution, and about to dash one of the proudest Governments that ever trampled on the human ground. Our business is to break it to pieces as a potter's vessel. Our resolutions will be for transcend the revolution of 1776 an hundred ago in duration transcends a minute. He then went on to say that the North had much more to complain of from the South than the Americans had in complaining of from the tyranny and oppression of the Government of George III. Therefore, there was more necessity for the revolution now at hand.

Mr. Ritchie, of Oregon, stated that he had been lately in Canada, and that he had during his visit there, ascertained that there were at the present time 20,000 slaves in Canada, 5,000 of whom had arrived there since the passage of the Fugitive Slave Law.

Money for Benevolent Purposes.—The receipts of ten of the principal Benevolent Societies, for the year ending 30th of April, (unless otherwise specified,) are subjoined. Though large, they are, in the aggregate, only about $15,000 greater than during the preceding year. The receipts of that year were near $300,000 greater than during the year 1848–'9:

| | 1850–'51 | 1849–'51 |
|---|---|---|
| Am. Tract Society, | $300,000 79 | $320,010 00 |
| Am. Bible Society, | 306 611 36 | 370,000 00 |
| Am. B. C. Foreign Missions, | 161,350 69 | 179,976 00 |
| Am. Home Missions Society, | 137,000 79 | 120,000 00 |
| Am. and For. Chr. Union, | 69,000 00 | 120,000 00 |
| Am. and For. Bible Society, | 41,000 00 | 42,572 41 |
| Am. Sup. Home Mis. Society, | 30,120 00 | 39,000 00 |
| Am. Seamen's Friend Society, | 41,000 00 | (19,000 41 |
| N. Y. State Colonization Soc., | 17,616 71 | 22,000 00 |
| Am. Soc. for Ameliorating the Condition of the Jews, | 6,000 00 | 11,000 00 |
| Total, | $1,000,702 79 | 1,000,700 00 |

* Of which $900,700 20 were the proceeds of the sales of tracts and volumes.

† From Aug. 1 to March 31—8 months.

‡ For eleven months, ending March 31.

§ The receipts from bequests last year were but $200; whereas, those of the previous year were $5,132. Considerable sums raised by the Cincinnia chtend—more than $5,000 from the Presbyterian Board of Missions, inclusive, nor still larger amounts raised and expended by auxiliaries. The whole sum would exceed $75,000 for the past year.

Population of Principal Cities.—The leading cities of the United States rate as follows, under the new census, as to population, compared with 1840:—

| | 1850. | 1840. |
|---|---|---|
| New York, | 517,940 | 312,710 |
| Philadelphia, | 450 000 | 258,037 |
| Baltimore, | 169,025 | 102,313 |
| New Orleans, | 152,000 | 102,000 |
| Boston, | 136,799 | 93,382 |
| Cincinnati, | 116,198 | 46,082 |
| Brooklyn, | 97,226 | 36,232 |
| St. Louis, | 95,000 | 16,469 |
| Pittsburg, | 50,000 | 40,000 |
| Washington, | 40,000 | 22,252 |
| Charleston, | 43,285 | 42,139 |
| Buffalo, | 42,277 | 18,213 |
| Louisville, | 42,000 | 20,000 |
| Providence, | 41,416 | 23,171 |
| Newark, | 38,535 | 17,290 |
| Rochester, | 36,561 | 20,191 |
| Lowell, | 32,994 | 20,796 |
| Williamsburg, | 30,086 | 5,092 |
| Richmond, | 28,000 | 20,151 |
| Chicago, | 28,269 | 4,470 |
| New Haven, | 22,539 | 14,390 |
| Syracuse, | 22,235 | 11,012 |
| Detroit, | 21,055 | 7,019 |
| Portland, | 20,019 | 15,219 |
| Milwaukie, | 20,035 | 1,712 |

The Wealthy Men of New York.—A book containing the names of persons, corporations and corporations, who have been taxed for $17,500 and upwards in New York City, the past year, has been published. It makes one hundred octavo pages. According to this report there are but two millionaires, viz: Wm. B. Astor, who is taxed $29,579 26 on $2,000,000, and Peter Lombard, whose property is set down at $1,169,900.

There are but five who are taxed for half a million and upwards, viz: James Brown, $500,000; Peter Goelet $666,600; James G. King, $567,500; Stephen Whitney $826 200; J. D. Wolfe $700,000; Wm. B. Moffat, the pill maker, is set down at $358,000; Hamilton Fish, the new U. S Senator, $278,500; Trinity Church is set down at $151,600. The Post says:—"By reference to this volume, the reader may learn how much of the wealth accumulated in New York escapes taxation, and infer how many millionaires, who barely grace with their names the school offices here, do their sleeping in Brooklyn, Williamsburgh, Jersey City, and other places, where the taxes are comparatively trifling."

Gubernatorial Conventions are held and in demand; a small sale of Crude at 45c per lb cash.

GUANO—Is in limited request without change in prices.

HEMP—The market continues inactive, and no sales worthy of notice have transpired.

HIDES—An import of 1,500 Laguayra have arrived which were previously contracted for, on terms kept secret.

HOPS—Are firmer. Sales of Eastern and Western is lots at 40@43c per lb.

INDIGO—The market has been quiet, but prices are firm.

IRON—The market continues excessively dull, and prices are barely supported. Sales of 900 tons Anthracite Nos 1 and 2 at $21,50@22 per ton, including 500 tons suitable for car wheels at $26, 6 mos. in Bar and Boiler Iron the sales are limited, without change in prices.

LEAD—Is dull and has declined 22c per lb. Sales of 4,700 pigs (Galena at $6,75, equal to cash.

LEATHER—There is a fair demand for Spanish Sole at 18@19, and Slaughter at 22@23c per lb.

LUMBER—As the building season advances, there is an increased demand for all descriptions, but without any material change in prices.

Cargoes.—We are informed, says the Mount Holly Mirror, that friend Abel Rulon, of Springfield, sold in the Philadelphia Market, ten pairs of capons, raised by him, for the handsome sum of $40. Four of these were a pair for chickens, appears to us a pleasant compensation for the business of raising poultry, and worthy of the consideration of farmers.

Remains of a Mammoth.—In excavating on the railroad, about six miles from Wheeling, Va., was discovered a tooth of a gigantic animal, imbedded in sand about sixteen feet deep. The tooth was not less than six and a half feet long, and at the large end measured eighteen inches in circumference.

☞ No Potato Rot West of the Rocky Mountains.—A letter from Oregon, says that the Potato Rot has never made its appearance there, or West of the Rocky Mountains.

NEW YORK MARKETS, MAY 10.

Ashes—Moderate sales at $5,50@ for Pearls, and $5 50 for Pots.

Cotton—The market is firmer to-day, and some 1,000 bales were sold at 1 improvement.

Flour, Meal—Flour market heavy, and prices will need decreasing to-day. 5,000 bbls at $4 44@4 50 for State, and $4,06@4 10 for Michigan. Southern dull, 100 bbls sold at $4,62@4 62½. Rye Flour and Corn Meal quiet.

Grain—The market is scarcely as firm for Wheat; sales 3,000 bushels Genesee, part at $1,16 and the remainder on private terms. and 2 000 white Michigan at $1 21. Rye quiet, with small sales at previous rates. Corn is still lower; sales 35,000 bushels at 70@70c, for Western mixed, 69@69c at 69½@70c for do, 63 cents for white Jersey, and 67c for Western mixed, to arrive next week. Oats continue firm.

Provisions—The market for Pork is easier, with sales of 1,000 bbls at $15,00@ and $13 87½ for new Mess and Prime; and $14,00@ and $13 for old do.

Beef is quiet, with sales of 250 bbls at former rates. Cut Meats are lower, with sales of 200 lbs pickled Hams at 5¾, and Shoulders at 5c. Lard is 1 cent lower; 400 bbls and kegs sold at 8@8½c.

Whiskey—Is doing better, with sales at 900 bbls at 20½@20¾c, and 50 casks Drudge at 20c, cash.

Wool—Market quiet. Small sales of Saxon and Dry Merinos at 60@65 cents, and Pure within the range of 62@65 cts, as to quality.

WOOL.—There is no material change to notice in the market. The stock in the dealers hands is nearly exhausted, and there is now only sufficient for the supply of their immediate wants on the expectation of lower prices. The sales only amount to 20,000 lbs in small lots, mostly at a decline on former quotations.

FREIGHTS—To Liverpool but little offering. We quote Flour loads 3d per bbl; Grain 6d per bushel, and Heavy Goods 40 cts per ton. Coals are in good demand to load in the Tees at 4s 3d@4s 6d to Boston; $1,50 to Rhode Island, and 60c per ton to New York.—Inquirer.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Philadelphia, May 15.—The offerings of Beef Cattle for the week were about 1,500 head. Beeves are selling from $6,00 to 7,00 per 100 lbs. Almost the whole stock of the lot sold from 6½ to 6,75 per 100 lbs. Cows—Almost 100 in market, and sold at prices ranging from $6 to 30. Sheep and Lambs—The former from $3 to 6, the latter from $1 to 3 according to quality.

Wright's Indian Vegetable Pills, in addition to being one of the best antibilious medicines in the world, possess a power in removing pain, which is truly astonishing. Four or five of said Indian Vegetable Pills, taken on going to bed, will in a short time completely rid the body of those morbid accumulations which, if lodged in the liver, are the cause of pain in the side, sometimes extending to the shoulder blade, difficulty of breathing, nausea and sickness, loss of appetite, costiveness, dizziness, sweats in yellow complexion, and other symptoms of an inflamed or torpid state of the liver.

Wright's Indian Vegetable Pills also thoroughly cleanse the stomach and bowels from all bilious humors, and either operate gently, and hence are a certain cure for colic, dysentery, cholera morbus, and other disorders of the intestines.

For sale by agents in all parts of the United States and Canada.

Principal Office 189 Race Street, Philadelphia.

ALMANAC.

| April, 1851. | SUN RISES | SUN SETS | MOON RISES | MOON'S PHASES |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 17 Saturday | 4 59 | 7 0 | 3 36 | |
| 18 Sunday | 4 58 | 7 0 | 4 49 | |
| 19 Monday | 4 57 | 7 1 | 6 02 | |
| 20 Tuesday | 4 56 | 7 1 | 7 15 | D. h. m. |
| 21 Wednesday | 4 55 | 7 2 | 8 30 | New 1 4 7 |
| 22 Thursday | 4 54 | 7 2 | 9 46 | First 9 9 40 |
| 23 Friday | 4 53 | 7 3 | 11 0 | Full 15 3 12 |
| 24 Saturday | 4 52 | 7 3 | 0 15 | Last 22 8 13 |
| | 4 51 | 7 4 | 1 30 | New 30 3 50 |

STATE OF THE THERMOMETER.

| | 9 o'clock. | 12 o'clock. | 3 o'clock. |
|---|---|---|---|
| May 4, | 56 | 69 | 66 |
| 5, | 56 | 69 | 66 |
| 6, | 53 | 69 | 62 |
| 7, | 53 | 69 | 63 |
| 8, | 53 | 70 | 67 |
| 9, | 60 | 76 | 71 |
| 10, | 66 | 80 | 77 |

Marriages.

On the morning of the 8th inst by Friends' Ceremony, before Mayor Gilpin, David M. Chambers, to Mary Dance, daughter of John R. Brock, all of this city.

On Thursday, the 1st inst. by Charles Gilpin, Esq., Mayor, Daniel C. Gilchrist to Elizabeth Ann Estelline Richardson, daughter of Mannyuk.

On the 29th ult. at St Philip's Church, by the Rev. H. B. Bascom, Mr. Thomas Williams, of Norristown, to Emma, daughter of John Lloyd, of Philadelphia.

At Rockborough, at the residence of Mr. Benjamin Mattis, on the 1st inst. by the Rev. L. S. Weber, Mr. Joseph S. Holladay, to Miss Eliza Martha Mattis, of Rockborough.

On the 5th ult. Mr. Alex. McCalley, to Miss Elizabeth Holladay.

On the 5th inst. by the Rev. J. L. Burrows, Mr. Robert Carter, to Miss Mary Ann Lupold, all of Spring Garden.

On the 1st inst. by the Rev. James Sewell, Mr. Benajah H. Brown, to Miss Mary M. Hoffman, all of this city.

On the 6th inst. by the Rev. Felix J. Barbelin, Joseph E. McElhenney, Jr. to Lizzie J. McCluskey, both of this city.

On the 6th inst. by the Rev. John Welsh, Mr. John Haines, of Germantown, to Miss Sarah A. Smith, of Southwark.

On the 6th inst. by the Rev. George Chandler, Mr. William Thompson, to Miss Catharine Jones.

On the 1st instant, by the Rev. Mr. Castle, Mr. William Reckel, to Miss Elizabeth Brown, all of Spring Garden, Philadelphia county.

Deaths.

On the 6th inst. Mr. William A. Sembrit.

On the 7th inst. Harriet, daughter of the late Capt. Wm. Bacon.

On the 5th inst. Mrs. Deborah Kirk, aged 83.

On the 5th inst. Mrs. Mary L. Duffield, aged 69.

In Camden, N. J., on the 7th inst. Elizabeth B. Davis, aged 7 years.

On the 9th inst. Miss Martha C. Rehn.

On the 7th inst. Lucia, son of Seth P. and Rebecca Mallory, aged 2 years.

On the 6th inst. Jane A. Moore, aged 77 years.

On the 5th inst. Mrs. Maria T. wife of H. Wilson, aged 31 years.

On the 7th inst. Mr. Murray H. Trefats, aged 25.

On the 8th inst. John McCalla, aged 57 years.

On the 7th inst. Mrs. Lucinda R. wife of N. R. Eugene.

On the 7th inst. John J. Cottringer, aged 63.

On the 7th inst. Philip Fasnacht, aged 74 years.

On the 6th inst. Mrs. Amanda Walters, wife of Mr. Valentine Sochestha, aged 34 years.

On the 6th inst. John Young, son of Geo. W. and Henrietta Story, aged 16 months.

On the 6th inst. Mary Ann, wife of James Kane, aged 43 years.

On the 6th inst. Mrs. Anastatia Omara, aged 60.

On the 6th inst. Mr. Henry Hulanis, aged 62.

On the 5th inst. Mary, wife of Joseph Barlow, aged 56 years.

On the 6th inst. Miss Alicia A. Wilson, aged 23.

On the 6th inst. Mrs. Mary Ann, wife of Jas. Neal, aged 32 years.

On the 7th inst. Mr. Daniel Fallon, aged 61.

On the 7th inst. John A. F. Lewis, Jr. aged 8.

On the 7th inst. John Marston, aged 25 years.

On the 7th inst. Mary A. Gardiner, aged 31.

On the 7th inst. William B. Wilson, M. D.

On the 7th inst. Mary, wife of M. Paddock

On the 6th inst. Maria White, wife of Charles H. Cooper, aged 31 years.

On the 6th inst. Mrs. Mary Hargus, aged 36.

On the 5th inst. Samuel Sims, aged 60 years.

On the 5th inst. Robert Smith, aged 61 years.

On the 5th inst. Mrs. Susanna Kennedy, aged 42.

On the 4th inst. William A. Thurp, aged 1.

On the 4th inst. Ann Hill.

On the 4th inst. John Ormsowild, aged 5 years and 6 months.

On the 7th inst. Sarah Jane, wife of C. Brockway, aged 27 years.

On the 5th inst. Anne, wife of Chas. Kelly.

On the 5th inst. James Taylor, aged 26 years.

DEATHS IN CALIFORNIA.

On Dry Creek, March 23d, Mrs. Matilda Hinkens, wife of Andw. H. Hinkens, aged 26, March 22, Mr. Wm. C. Tompson, of Ky., aged 35.

At Sonora, March 7, Wm. Anderson, a native of Memphis, Tenn.

On board the United States ship Warren, on the 15th of March, Lieut. William H. Thompson, U. S. Navy.

At Mormon Gulch, March 9th, Colonel John O. Roberts, of Asheville; 17th March, Mrs. Mary C. Martin, of St. James, Louisiana, aged 36, March 13, Geo. W. Davidson, aged 24.

At Victoria, China, Dec. 11th, Commander J. H. Ince, of H. M. brig Pluto. Dec. 21st, Lieut. Gil Nevett, Royal Artillery.

Lot of Deaths in Sacramento City.—For the week ending the 19th March, March 11.—Rebecca J. Howard, 5 months, Sacramento City; 12, child of H. Cook, 9 months, city; 12, J. McDonald, 22, Scotland; 15, two strangers, unknown; 15, Mr. Orlando Brewington, of Akron, O., aged 30.

March 16, at Rose's Bar, Yuba River, Mr. Donald Henderson, aged about 40.

March 1st, Miss Martha B. Hall, aged 15, of Vicksburg, Miss.

At Honolulu, Feb. 7th, John W. Millett, aged 41.

At Victoria, Hong Kong, Feb. 17, 1, Junaes Patrick, of N. York city, in his 25th year.

At Shanghai, Feb. 1, Capt. C. H. Cooksey, of the American bark Huntingdon.

At Shanghai, Feb. 18, W. F. Robinson, Esq., of Salem, Mass., aged 35.

At Victoria, Hong Kong, Jan. 31, Elizabeth, wife of Saml. Clifton, Chief of Police.

Deaths in Sacramento City during the week ending March 23: March 17, Richard Ridgway Ely, Missouri; 19, John B. Sargeant, 28, Cincinnati; 19, John F. Tibbits, 30, Iowa; 20, Patrick Ryan, 32, Iowa; 23, Lemuel B. Lent, 30, Ithaca, N. Y.

List of Deaths in San Francisco, since the sailing of the last steamer, reported for the Alta, by N. Gray, City Sexton, Sacramento, March 15.—Mrs. Margaret Thompson, U. S. Navy, 20; Madame Lamotte, France, 26; Louis Retard, 10, 17; J. McHenry, Philadelphia, 44; Mrs. Martin, Louisiana, 30; Mrs. Mary Ann Day, Iowa, 35; 36, Thomas Anderson, Indiana, 43; 31, James Monroe; Prince Edward Island, 20; George Wilcox, New York City, 40; 23, Samuel Payne, Connecticut, 40; 23, Theodore Cramer, Germany, 31; Wm. H. Carr, 40; Leonard Bruce, Maine, 25; 24, Mr. Chase, Missouri, 60; John W. Clark, 32, John Smith, Boston, 30; 27, Anthony H. Brooks, England; 26, Wm. Armstrong, Scotland, 42; Jose Lobo, Chili, 30; Capt. Elijah M. Jarvis, Texas, 50; John Whitall, Liverpool, England, 35; J. J. Dubois, Chili, 19, 29, infant daughter of Capt. J. M. Smith; unknown man, clothes marked J. P. 45; Bonifacio Habito, Mexico, 25; Leopold Lambeck, France, 42; C. E. Jones, Connecticut, 25; J. J. Harrigan, three dec, 36.

ROGERS' COACH FACTORY,
S. E. CORNER OF SIXTH AND BROWN STREETS,
PHILADELPHIA.

WHERE CARRIAGES of every description are built to order and for sale, which for Style, Durability and elegance of Finish cannot be surpassed by any in the country. Work warranted as represented and the most reasonable terms.

Gentlemen and Ladies who will find it to their advantage to call at this establishment, as the proprietor is a Practical Coach Maker, and having worked in the best shops in the east and in other countries, flatters himself that the name of all persons who may be called, the work being executed under his immediate inspection, and from any part of the country promptly attended to.

N. B.—Gentlemen can rest from the Baltimore past the Railway every few minutes.

ap9 6m WM. D. ROGERS.

RATES OF ADVERTISING.

For a single square, (eighteen lines,)
For one month, $5.00
For each subsequent insertion, $1.00
For one square 3 months, $12.00
For one square, a year, $40.00
☞ Payment is required in advance.

TRAVELLING AGENTS.

Mr. C. W. James, No. 1 Exchange Street, Cincinnati, Ohio, is our general travelling agent for the Western States; assisted by J. B. Smith, J. T. Rose, James Taylor, Porter Leslie, W. Bunting, Dr. Judd's Wakefield, Allen B. Lowe, and R. K. Cornell.

Mr. Henry M. Lewis, of Montgomery, Alabama, is our general travelling agent for Alabama, and Tennessee, assisted by James G. Lewis and D. K. Goodwin.

Mr. Israel S. James, No. 192 South Tenth Street, Philadelphia, is our general Travelling Agent, assisted by William H. Weld, John Collins, James Dunlap, A. Byrd Wilkinson, R. A. Brown, John T. Stafford, J. Leslie, Jos. Brown, Chs. P. Bunton, and Thos. B. Nye.

WILLIAM A. PIERCE is our only Collector of Bills in Pennsylvania.

MORTIMER T. WEBB, &c. &c. for New York State.

JUSTUS WHITE, &c. &c. and collects for us in New York and the Canadas.

JOHN MAJOR will receive new subscriptions in Missouri and Illinois.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

MAY be obtained weekly at the Periodical Depots

Of HOTCHKISS & Co., Boston, Mass.
Of MILTON BOULEMENT, Mobile, Ala.
Of J. C. MORGAN, New Orleans, La.
Of J. GEST & BROTHER, Lancaster, Pa.
Of W. TAYLOR & Co., Baltimore, Md.
Of SAFFORD & PARK, Norwich, Conn.
Of P. HAGAN & Co., Nashville Tenn.
Of S. W. PEASE, 20 West Second Street, and 19 West Fourth Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.
Of J. W. RANDOLPH & Co., Richmond, Va.
Of W. ADAM, Washington, D. C.
Of RINGGOLD & BEATTY, Louisville, Ky.
Of ELI ADAMS, Salem, N. J.

Subscriptions will be received at either of the above mentioned Depots. But the proprietors of the Post hold themselves responsible only for money received directly by themselves, or through their authorized travelling agents.

Bank Note List.

Corrected for the Saturday Evening Post, by R. Johnston & Co., Brokers, No. 56 South Third Street.

PHILADELPHIA, May 17, 1851.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Philadelphia banks par
U S bank notes 13 dis
Commissioning 1 dis
York 1 dis
Berks county no sale
Gettysburg 1 dis
Lancaster 1 dis
Lewistown no sale
Brownsville 1 dis
Uniontown 1 dis
Waynesburg 1 dis
Washington 1 dis
Erie 1 dis
Susquehanna or'mpfield 1 dis
Lebanon par
Lehigh county bk par
Towanda no sale
Honesdale 1 dis
Wyoming 1 dis
West Branch par
Wyoming 1 dis
Northampton no sale
Schuylkill Haven par
Danville 1 dis
Relief notes 1 dis

NEW JERSEY.

Trenton, M'l Holly,
Bridgeton, Salem,
Camden, Mantua, par
Plainfield closed
State bk at Morris 1 dis
Newark, Newtown,
Paterson, Morristown, New Brunswick, Middletown, Point, Orange, Belleville, Elizabeth, Somerville, Rahway, Prin Amboy 1 dis

Selected Poetry.

TRAILING ARBUTUS.

[The following communication reached us after the publication of our last number. It is charged with no extraordinary merit, and delivers a heresy on the "darling blue-eyed" of childhood. We regret to observe, however, the evidence of a cultivated mind. [Ed. Mir.]

Darling of the Spring!
Blossoming alone
When Earth's gold is scarce
For her jewels gone—

See the buds unfold forth, your tender buds have blown.

Draped with faint shades
Like the morning sky,
So sweet pale and modest,
Wrapped in leaves so dry,
Even as children sleep in faith's simplicity.

Thus the cold woodwinds
Harass your delicate,
And the rough season sweeps
Through the budding wood,
While the low South Wind sighs, but does not its mate coax.

When your pure face lies fashioned
Out of air and dew;
Starlight accompanied;
There's most tender hue;
And scented by the mists that gathered sweets for you?

Purest and most lonely,
From the world apart,
Made for beauty only,
Veiled from Nature's heart,
With such marvelous grace as makes the dream of Art!

Were not sacred sorrow
An immortal shade,
Then would I discover
Such a flower be made,
And live in the deer woods where my last childhood played.

April 16, 1851. S. W. H.

Selected Articles.

HOW TO BE IDOLIZED.

A STRANGE STORY.

The hyperbole of being "idolized" was never, perhaps, made a literal truth in so striking a manner as is shown in the following story; for which we are indebted to a French author.

In 1810, the good ship "Dido" left the Mauritius, on her voyage to Sumatra. She had a cargo of French manufactures on board, which her captain was to barter, for coffee and spice, with the subjects of the Sunda Isles. After a few days' sail, the vessel was becalmed; and both passengers and crew were put on short allowance of provisions and water.

Preserved meats, fruits, chocolate, fine flour, and live-stock, were all exhausted, with the exception of one solitary particularfat cock, who, perched on the main yard, was mourning his destined doom. His Round Boy, after the hand's of the Pyramids.

The ship's cook, Neptune, a Madagascar negro, received orders one morning to prepare this bird for dinner, and once more, the hungry denizens of the cabin-table smelled up the delicious odor of food. The captain took a nap, in order to shoot his appetite well dinner-time; and the chief mate lounged his on the gunwale, and whistled for a breeze. His guardian-angel record him, by whistling for any audacious spoiler should lay violent hands on the glorious destiny.

Suddenly, a cry of terror and despair issued from the cook's cabin, and Neptune himself rushed out, the picture of affright, with both his hands twisted, convulsively, in the scaly wool that covered his head. What was the matter? Alas! in his stead how the cook had slumbered at his post, and the fowl was burnt to a cinder.

A fit of rage, exasperated by hunger and a trying heat, set in a fearful thirst. The vessel entering a dreadful imprecation, seized a large knife and rushed at Neptune. At that moment, one of the passengers, named Louis Borgne, interposed to ward off the blow. The negro was saved, but his preserver received the point of the steel in his wrist, and his blood flowed freely. With much difficulty the other passengers succeeded in preventing him in his turn, from stocking the mate, but, at length, peace was restored, the aggressor having apologized for his violence. As to poor Neptune, he fell on his knees, and kissed the feet of his protector.

In a day or two the breeze sprung up, and the Dido speedily reached Sumatra. Four years afterwards, it happened, one day, that Louis Borgne was dining at the public table of an English boarding-house at Batavia. Among the guests were two learned men who had been sent out by the French Government to inquire into the curiosities near the equator. During dinner, the name of Borgne happening to be pronounced distinctly by one of his acquaintances at the opposite side of the table, the oldest of the savans looked up from his plate, and asked, quickly,

"Who own's the name of Borgne?"

"I do."

"Curious enough," said the savant, "you bear the same name as a god of Madagascar."

"What! do they a god called Borgne?" asked Louis, smiling.

"Yes. And if you like, after dinner, I will show you an article on the subject, which I published in an English scientific journal."

Louis thanked him; and afterwards read as follows:

"The population of Madagascar consists of a mixture of Africans, Arabs and the aborigines' inhabitants. These latter occupy the highest of the lands, and are governed by a king. The Malagasys differ widely from the Ethiopian race, both in their physical and moral character istics. They are hospitable and humane, but extremely warlike, become a successful army furnishes them with sheeps. It is a mistake to believe that the Malagasys worship the Devil, and that they have at Tanatinga a tree consecrated to the Evil One. They have but one temple, dedicated to the god Borgne (bor, sorrow, or evil, in the Chaldean, and gne, light, in the Malagasy tongue.) To this divinity they are ardently devoted, and at stated periods offer his the sacrifice of a cock, as the ancient Greeks did to Esculapius. So true it is that the languages and superstitions of all lands and ages are linked together by mysterious bonds, which neither time nor distance can destroy."

Louis Borgne thought the latter philosophical reflections very striking.

"You can scarcely imagine," said his companion, "how important these remote analogies traced out by us with so much labor and fatigue, are to the advancement of science!"

Borgne bowed, and was silent.

The cares of a busy, commercial life soon caused him to forget both the philosopher and his own idol namesake.

After the lapse of about two years, Borgne set out to purchase ebony at Cape St. Maria, in Madagascar; but a violent tempest forced the vessel to stop at Sleepi on the Anan Coast. While the crew were busy refitting the ship, Borgne started off to explore the interior of the country. There are no carnivorous wild beasts in Madagascar; but there is abundance of game to tempt the sportsman, and Louis, with his gun on his shoulder, followed the chase of partridges, quails and pheasants, for several miles, until he reached the border of a thick bamboo jungle.

There, he saw a number of the natives prostrate before the entrance of a large hut. They were singing, with one accord, a monotonous sort of hymn, whose burden was the word "Borgne!" so distinctly pronounced, that Louis immediately remembered the account given him by the philosopher in Batavia.

Impelled by very natural curiosity, he stepped forward, and entered into the temple. Its attempt had been made to ornament its four walls, built of bamboos, cemented with clay; but, in the centre of the floor, stood, on a pedestal, the statue of the god Borgne, and Louis was greatly struck with his appearance.

The idol, though far from being a finished work of art, was yet far superior in form and workmanship, to the ordinary divinities of savage nations. The figure represented a man dressed in European costume, with a wide straw hat on his head, and a striped muslin cravat round his neck. He was standing in the attitude of one who is interrupting a blow, and his right hand was stained with blood. There was even an attempt, Louis Borgne thought, to imitate his own features; and the god had thick, black whiskers, meeting under his chin, prolonged such as Louis had worn in 1810. The dress, remarked his own; and the utensil, marked by the letters L. B., was one which he had given Neptune, the cook. In a few minutes, a procession of natives entered the temple; they kindled a fire in a sort of chafing-dish, and, placing it on a dead cock, burnt the sacrifice before their god, amid loud acclamation. Borgne, naturally, was not able to preserve his gravity during this pious ceremonial. He burst into a fit of laughter, and was instantly seized by the offended worshippers. With a shout of rage they were about to slaughter him in their enraged deity, when a series of symbols announced the approach of the chief of the tribe. The high priest met him at the door, and entreated the stranger. The to expend childish refund a Malagasy sovereign, and was in duty vengeance on the offender. Borgne

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [